DE CHAULNES DEAD AFTER HONEYMOON

HAD BEEN TAKING MORPHINE

Mr. Shonts Had Arranged to Give Him a Business Post Abroad — The Shontses to Go to Paris.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 24.—Less than ten weeks after his marriage to Miss Theodora Shonts, the Duc de Chaulnes died suddenly last night about midnight in his apartments in the Hotel Langham. His bride awoke to find him dying, and before she could summon assistance he had passed away.

The attending physicians officially give the cause of death as embolism of the heart. Some of those who knew the Duke best say that the immediate cause of death was an overdose of morphine, to the use of which drug the Duke had been addicted.

The drug habit was acquired long ago by the Duke, and friends tell of times when he had remained under the influence of the narcotic for days at a time. Just prior to his visit to America, whither he went to marry Miss Shonts, he is reported to have given full rein to his habit. Then came a period of comparative abstinence. Since the marriage he is known to have made a most heroic effort to do without the drug.

Since their return to Paris the Duke and Duchess had been living quietly at the Langham Hotel in the Rue Boccador. They went out but little, and had received few friends for the last fortnight. The Duke seemed to be a victim of growing melancholy, and also had moments of great irascibility.

Dying Grasp Awakened Bride.

The Duke and Duchess did not leave the hotel last night. The Duke retired shortly after dinner, complaining that he felt worn out. The Duchess retired soon after. She found her husband apparently in profound sleep. He was breathing heavily, but otherwise there were no unusual symptoms.

The Duchess herself had fallen asleep when at midnight she was awakened by a convulsive grip on her arm. Receiving no answer to her startled question as to what was the matter, she tore herself free and turned on the electric light.

She found her husband in the last extremity. The Duke was dead when the servants responded to her frantic summons. The physician who came later said that the Duke had died of heart trouble. At first the police ordered an autopsy, but this formality was later waived. M. Jeanton, a police physician, made an examination of the body in the presence of other physicians and officially certified that death was due to a natural cause, and that there was no necessity for the autopsy.

Await the Arrival of Mr. Shonts.

The body of the Duke was taken to the residence of the Duc d'Uzes, his brother-in-law. It was placed in a double oak coffin to-night, and to-morrow morning will be transferred to a crypt in the Church of St. Philippe de Roule, where it will remain pending arrangements for the funeral, which it is expected will not take place until after the arrival of Mr. Shonts from New York.

The Duchess was holding the Duke in her arms when he died. She was overcome by grief, and could not be persuaded by some of her American friends to leave the bedside of her dead husband, and kept vigil there throughout the night. She was still suffering greatly to-night.

Theodore P. Shonts was notified by cable of his daughter's bereavement, and a message was received from him to-day saying that he would take the first steamer leaving New York. The Duke's family was notified this morning, and his sister, the Duchesse d'Uses, who was at Biarritz, started immediately for Paris.

When the death of the Duke became generally known to-day a steady stream of his friends, including a number of members of the French nobility, called at the hotel and left cards of condolence.

In accordance with traditions of the French nobility, the funeral will be a pretentious one and will attract to Paris the representatives of the most ancient families in France, with which the Duke's family is allied.

SHONTS PRAISES THE DUKE.

Made His Bride Happy—Was Prepared to Enter Business.

Theodore P. Shonts, Mrs. Shonts, and their daughter, Miss Marguerite Shonts, will sail on the American liner St. Louis to-day to join the Duchess de Chaulnes. A cable to Mr. Shonts from his sister, Mrs. John A. Drake, who is in Paris, conveyed to the family the first news of the death of the Duc de Chaulnes. Through the day Mr. Shonts had no other information than the press dispatches, as a later cable did not go into details as to the sudden death of his son-in-law. The news came as a great shock to the Shonts family, who had become warmly attached to the Duke after his persistent and romantic courtship of Miss Theodora Shonts. Mr. Shonts expressed this feeling before he left his office for the day.

"Only this morning," he said, "I received three letters from my daughter, and all of them breathed such absolute happiness that I was deeply affected. Mrs. Shonts came into the room while I was reading them and noticed that I was

BLIZZARD IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Snow Covers the Entire Land and Traffic Is Tied Up.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 24.—Not within the memory of the present generation has Great Britain been visited by such furious blizzards so late in the Spring as began to rage throughout the whole country on Thursday and continued early to-day. The storm brought with it a heavy snowstorm, which has covered the entire land, doing great damage to the fruit-growing districts and giving a serious setback throughout the agricultural sections.

The weather experts figure that a blizzard of such severity so late in the season will visit England about once in 200 years, and the cause of it remains a meteorological mystery.

Traffic has been seriously impeded all over the country, and in many districts where the snow fell heaviest it has been stopped altogether. In the eastern counties the depth of the snow averaged from 9 to 15 inches, while in Scotland the mean fall was 9 inches. The scenes in London yesterday morning resembled a characteristic New England Christmas.

CHURCHILL IS DEFEATED.

Newly Appointed British Minister Fails of Election to Commons.

MANCHESTER, April 24. — Winston Spencer Churchill, who was recently made President of the Board of Trade in the Asquith Cabinet, was to-day defeated for the House of Commons in the northwest division of Manchester. The heaviest poll cast in twenty years reversed its verdict of 1906. By a majority of 429 votes W. Joynson-Hicks, Unionist, who was defeated by Mr. Churchill two years ago, was elected. The result was:

W. Joynson-Hicks, Unionist, 5,417.

Winston Spencer Churchill, Liberal, 4,988.

Mr. Irving, Socialist, 276.

The defeat of Mr. Churchill is a crushing blow to the prestige of the Government and the young and confident Minister, which is bound to have a marked influence in several other impending bye-elections. There will be no difficulty in finding for Mr. Churchill a safe seat elsewhere.

The Liberals may derive from their defeat of to-day what consolation is possible from the fact that prior to 1906 the northwest division seat was held consistently by the Conservatives and was won by Mr. Churchill only by a most brilliant campaign.

AUTO HIT BY TWO CARS.

While Wedged Between Them the Gasoline Catches Fire.

Thomas O'Mara of 167 West Sixty-fourth Street was hastening down Fifty-sixth Street in an automobile to the home of his employer, Frederick B. Burton, at 23 East Fifty-sixth Street, last night when a northbound Madison Avenue street car hit the auto amidships, throwing it partly on the southbound track.

Just as O'Mara was about to pull off the track a southbound surface car also hit the automobile, pinning the machine tightly between the two cars. O'Mara jumped for his life.

The impact threw the southbound car off the tracks and broke the gasoline tank in the auto. The inflammable fluid flowed down into the electric conduit, causing a short circuit, which ignited the gasoline. But the motormen and the chauffeur quickly obtained tin buckets and caught the gasoline as it poured out of the tank.

Mr. Burton, who had witnessed the accident from his stoop, came to the corner to investigate and was a very surprised man when he learned that it was his own automobile.

MR. CLEVELAND IMPROVES.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 24.—Reports from the Lakewood Hotel, where ex-President Grover Cleveland is now confined by an attack of rheumatic gout, say that he is resting comfortably, and was slightly improved to-day. A nurse came to Lakewood with Mr. Cleveland from Princeton and has remained here since. She and Mrs. Cleveland are the only persons who are attending him.

Dr. Joseph Bryant, the family physician, who was here on Wednesday, returned to Lakewood to-night from New York and is with Mr. Cleveland. He was not summoned, however, on account of any change in the ex-President's condition. He may stay over Sunday. No local physician has been called into the case. Dr. Gaudinier, the hotel physician, left town on Wednesday and will not return.

Dr. Bryant has told friends that aside from his age, which undoubtedly has had its effect on Mr. Cleveland, there had been nothing about him to cause alarm.

BIG LOCKOUT IN BRITAIN.

Shipbuilders Decide to Shut Down in Order to Stop a Strike.

LONDON, April 24.—At a meeting held in Carlisle this afternoon the Shipbuilding Employers' Federation decided to order a lockout in every shipbuilding yard in the United Kingdom. This action is in accordance with the announcement made by the Federation April 15, when they said that unless the ship workmen on the northeast coast who went on strike the middle of January resumed work by April 25 all the yards in the country would be closed down.

The decision was reached after a five hours' conference at which representatives of the unions urged that the strike on the northeast coast be submitted to arbitration. The employers declined to discuss this proposal, and insisted that the strikers return to work at reduced wages.

MAN OF 100 WALKS 15 MILES.

Michigan Centenarian Goes to Funeral of Fellow-Club Member.

Special to The New York Times.

MUSKEGON, Mich., April 24.—"Buckshot Dan" McPhail, 104 years old, walked fifteen miles to-day to attend the funeral of Patrick Phillip Bogle, who died Tuesday at the age of 100.

McPhail is a member of a "Hundred-Year-Old Club," composed of half a dozen residents of Muskegon County, whose ages are in the neighborhood of the century mark. They have sworn to be chums for life, and to attend the funeral services of all members who die before them.

OPERATOR'S MISTAKE KILLED RACE BILLS

Cassidy Got Telegram from Fassett Advising Him "Not" to Vote for Them.

SAY "NOT" WAS INSERTED

Some Politicians Declare This Is Attempt by Fassett to Retain the Favor of His Constituents.

An entirely new light was thrown on the vote of State Senator Owen Cassidy against the Anti-Race-Track Gambling bills yesterday. It developed that Cassidy, just before the voting began, received a telegram from Congressman J. Sloat Fassett, who represents part of his district. This telegram, as received, advised him to vote against the bills. It now appears that the telegram, as sent, advised him to vote for the bills, and that the error of a telegraph operator was actually responsible for the defeat of Gov. Hughes's pet measures.

The story of the telegrams, coupled with the assertion that, at the extra session, Senator Cassidy would change his vote and thus assure the passage of the measure, reached this city yesterday afternoon. Senator Cassidy himself came to town last evening for a few minutes. He was seen at the Hoffman House and asked about the story.

"I have nothing to say about it," he said somewhat doggedly.

"Did you receive a telegram from Mr. Fassett?" was asked.

"I received two telegrams."

"Two telegrams from Congressman Fassett?"

"Two telegrams from Mr. Fassett."

"Did Mr. Fassett advise you to vote for or against the bill?"

"I have nothing to say; I decline to discuss the matter."

"Won't you say whether this story is true that the telegram was erroniously transmitted?"

"I will not discuss the matter in any way."

Some Politicians Skeptical.

Some of the politicains who heard the story expressed the belief that it was a "frame up." The opinion was expressed that Congressman Fassett as one of the "Federal crowd" known to be opposed to the Governor, had really advised Cassidy to vote against the bills, but that now with a Congressional convention about to be held in which his renomination is at stake he is anxious to appear before his constituents as favoring instead of having opposed the Governor's measures. In some quarters it was even asserted that Cassidy was being made to bear the brunt of the odium attaching to his vote on the bills to protect Fassett.

Congressman Fassett, according to these dispatches, asserted that the story of the falsified telegram was true. He and Congressman John Dwight, part of whose district is also in Cassidy's district, united in sending the following telegram to Cassidy on the day the bills came up in the Legislature:

"John and I urge you to stand by the Governor on the Race Track bill, owing to conditions in your district.

"J. S. FASSETT."

The story is that Cassidy received the telegram while in the Senate Chamber, and so close to the time for voting that he had no chance to make an investigation even had he desired to do so. The telegram he received read:

"John and I urge you not to stand by the Governor," &c.

The insertion in the body of the message of the single word "not" changed the entire meaning, of course, and Cassidy voted in the negative, defeating the passage of the bill. When this fact became known in Washington the next day Mr. Fassett and Mr. Dwight, according to the story, sent a second telegram which read:

"John and I think you have made a serious, if not fatal, mistake. Get busy. Move to reconsider and pass the bill.

"J. S. FASSETT."

One story told in Elmira was to the effect that Cassidy and Fassett met in New York some days after the bill had been defeated, and that Cassidy had shown the Congressman the telegram he received. Thereupon the Congressman became very angry, and said a fraud had been perpetrated.

Washington Operator Blamed.

He started an investigation, and in Elmira last night said that he was satisfied as to where the mistake had occurred. His version was that the operator at the Capitol, in Washington, in sending the message to the general office for transmission, asserted that he had eighteen words. The receiving operator thereupon replied over the wire:

"You have sent nineteen."

"Well, let it go at nineteen," the transmitting operator is said to have replied, without stopping to check up on the original message.

Mr. Fassett is said to have displayed in Elmira a letter from the Western Union manager in Washington admitting the error and placing the responsibility on an operator, who, Mr. Fassett said, has been discharged for gross carelessness.

From Albany last night came dispatches asserting that Cassidy had exhibited the first telegram in various places, shortly after the Agnew-Hart bill was voted on, in explanation of his vote. There seems to be no record of his having displayed the second telegram. This message, in fact, was not known of generally until late last night, after Senator Cassidy had left for Elmira.

The vote on the Race Track bill took place on April 8. The Legislature did not adjourn until April 22, two weeks later. It is expected that Mr. Cassidy will explain at Elmira to-day why he did not follow the advice contained in the second telegram and move a reconsideration.

In this city it was believed last night by a great many politicians and race track men that, in view of the developments, Senator Cassidy would change his vote, and vote for the bills when they come up at the special session which the Governor has called. It was pointed out, however, that while, had Senator Cassidy changed his vote two days before adjournment, his action would have meant the passage of the bills, his doing so at the special session may have but little effect, inasmuch as one or two of the Senators who voted for the bill are pretty sure to be absent.

Senator Foelker of Brooklyn, who supported the bill, has already been excused on account of sickness.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Western Union people here decline to discuss the Cassidy telegram matter in any way.

HUGHES TO SPEAK FOR BILLS.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 24.—Gov. Hughes intends to utilize the interim between the regular session of the Legislature, which came to a close yesterday, and the extraordinary session, called for May 11, in conducting a vigorous personal campaign throughout the State in the interest of his race-track reforms. Thus far the only engagements definitely settled upon are those here and at Troy next Sunday, and one at Ithaca on the evening of May 1.

DEADLY SNAKE HERE, USEFUL IN INSANITY

Poison from the Lancehead's Bite Will Kill an Ox Within Five Minutes.

ITS VENOM INVALUABLE

No New Serum Has Been Got in Eighty Years — First Specimen Ever Brought Here from Brazil.

A lancehead viper from Brazil, the most deadly of all known reptiles, was exhibited last night before the Academy of Pathological Science as a preliminary to a remarkable operation, which will give to science a serum which has become practically extinct, a serum which is used in the treatment of insanity and other forms of mental or nervous diseases. The operation, which is expected to furnish the medical profession with another supply this serum, will be performed to-morrow morning in the operating room at the Bronx Zoological Park, when the deadly poison from the lancehead viper fangs will be extracted.

The reptile, which is found only in Brazil near the upper waters of the Amazon, was imported a few days ago by Dr. E. W. Runyon of the firm of Boerlicke & Runyon, manufacturing chemists at 11 West Forty-second Street, for the sole purpose of replenishing the supply of lancehead viper serum. The serum is known to medical men as "lachesis," taking its name from the scientific name of the snake, Lachesis trigonocaphalus. The name itself sounds dangerous, and the snake lives up to its name.

Last Supply Eighty Years Ago.

For eighty years the supply of "lachesis" has not been replenished, the only supply having been for all that period that which came from a single specimen of the lancehead viper captured at that time in Brazil by Dr. Constantine Hering, who had been sent to Brazil by the German Government in the interest of medical science.

Three years ago Dr. Runyon began his efforts to replenish his firm's supply of this serum, but he found many difficulties in his path. In the first place the natives of Brazil are terribly afraid of the lancehead viper, knowing full well that to be bitten by the reptile means almost instant death, and that no antidote exists to counteract the effect of the poison once it gets into the system.

Although Dr. Runyon instructed his Brazilian agents to get a healthy specimen of the lancehead at any cost, it was many months before one could be obtained. And when it was got another obstacle was met. The Portuguese sailors on the ships plying between this city and Brazilian ports have a healthy horror of the lancehead, and when Dr. Runyon's agents attempted to get the snake aboard a mutiny was threatened. While waiting for a ship which would consent to take the snake to New York the first specimen died.

Some months passed, and another was obtained near the mouth of the Amazon. But again the agent was unable to get a ship to bring it northward. For several weeks he tried, but in the end failed, and the snake was killed. Of late even more urgent orders have been sent by Dr. Runyon, and his Brazilian agent was nearly in despair.

Another Snake Got at Last.

Then the third snake was captured, and this time the agent sought out a ship Captain who was a personal friend, in command of the Brazilian liner Acre. The Captain agreed to take personal charge of a strong wooden box containing the lancehead, or "the sudden death," as it is called by the natives of Northern Brazil. He kept the snake in his cabin and the sailors knew nothing of its presence on board.

Last Saturday the Acre arrived in port and was met by Dr. Runyon. On Monday Dr. Runyon took his precious box to Bronx Park and placed it in the custody of Raymond L. Dittmars, curator of the reptile house. Dr. Dittmars identified the snake as a true specimen of the lancehead viper.

This is the first lance-head viper ever brought into the United States, it is said. Dr. Dittmars guarded the snake carefully until last night, when Dr. Runyon called for it, as he had been requested to exhibit it before the monthly meeting of the Academy of Pathological Science at the Hotel Cumberland, Fifty-fourth Street and Broadway.

Dr. Runyon arrived at the meeting of the pathologists an hour late. As he entered with the box there were buzzes of whispers.

"There is the spearhead and his guardian," said one pathologist to another.

The woman stenographer had been told of the snake and edged away as Dr. Runyon placed the box on a table near her.

The top of the box and the sides were of thick plate glass, but to those who peered inside at the wicked-looking snake coiled at the bottom of the box, ready to spring, the glass looked all too thin. In full view of the pathologists the box remained until after the discussion of several scientific papers which had been read. Then Dr. Runyon was called upon to tell about the lancehead. He first exhibited several pictures showing the lancehead in his native habitat, also one showing the skull and fangs laid bare with the little holes just beneath the ends of the two top fangs, from which the poison comes after the snake strikes its victim.

Dr. Runyon began by telling the pathologists of the discovery of the lancehead by Dr. Hering in 1828. He said that Dr. Hering and his wife were near the upper waters of the Amazon exploring, when he was warned by the natives to look out for what he called the "Surukuku," a deadly snake. They described the reptile to Dr. Hering as being about ten feet long, with a flat head resembling an arrow. The bite, they told him, meant instant death. Dr. Hering was interested at once.

"Capture one and bring it to me," he ordered his servants. They were aghast at the idea, but went away and returned

100 DEAD, 200 HURT, IN TORNADO'S PATH

Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama Are Swept—Victims Are Chiefly Negroes.

SMALL TOWNS DESTROYED

Hundreds of Plantation Cabins Wrecked and Their Occupants Buried in the Debris—Memphis Lashed.

NEW ORLEANS, April 24.—A wind of cyclonic proportions swept over portions of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama late to-day, leaving a trail of dead and injured. To-night the number of killed is estimated at close to a hundred and the number of injured at over a hundred, with many portions of the afflicted districts to hear from.

Most of the dead are negroes. Perhaps a dozen white persons were caught in falling buildings and either fatally injured or so seriously disabled as to require medical attention.

The loss of life was chiefly in the quarters of colored persons, where the wind destroyed their cabins, burying the occupants in the debris, or in the farming sections of the country, where trees were uprooted and telegraph and telephone poles torn up.

To-night it is difficult to estimate the loss of life or the extent of the destruction of property, for there is little or no communication with the points where the wind and rain did its greatest damage.

In Louisiana it is estimated that a score of small towns were destroyed or partly wrecked. They include Amite City, Arcadia, and Independence. Belle Grove, Melton, Lorman, Pine Ridge, Quitman Landing, Fairchild's Creek, Purvis, and Lumberton, Miss., are reported seriously damaged by the storm. Forty-five persons were killed and seventy-five injured in Amite.

In Alabama Dora was the chief sufferer. This town is also known as Bergen. Four or more persons were killed, among them the wife and daughter of Section Master Moore. Fifty persons, at the lowest estimate, were injured. Those most seriously hurt were carried to hospitals in Birmingham. One woman, a Mrs. McCully, died on the train. Two other members of this family were seriously injured.

At Bergen cars were blown from the railroad tracks and considerable other property destroyed.

Reports also say that the storm struck Albertville, Ala., late this afternoon and destroyed nearly the entire northern portion of the town. A cotton mill was blown down, the storm ranging northward, doing much destruction to life and property. An unconfirmed report from this section gives the death list as from thirty to thirty-five, with scores of persons injured.

A special train was sent from Birmingham to-night, carrying physicians and a squad of State militiamen to the district. Aid is also pouring in from all other directions.

From Meridian, Miss., comes a report that Mrs. John Minniece and her child were killed outright and John Minniece was seriously injured, while a number of other persons were hurt.

Richland and Lamourie, La., were struck by the storm and nearly a fifth of their population injured.

Winchester, Miss., a small town, is reported wiped out. Hundred of plantation cabins are reported destroyed in this section.

Mobile reported nine dead in Hattiesburg, Miss., but this has not been confirmed.

TEXAS TOWNS WRECKED.

One Resident of Deport Is Killed and Several Injured.

PARIS, Texas, April 24.—A tornado destroyed the eastern portion of Deport, a town twenty miles southeast of Paris, last night, killing W. R. Isbell, a druggist, and injuring several others. The Isbell family was at supper when the storm came, and Mrs. Isbell and the children ran to the storm house and were unhurt. Mr. Isbell remained in the house and was crushed to death when it fell.

Practically all the residences on the east side of town were destroyed, at least twenty-five or thirty being scattered over the country in fragments. The Baptist and Presbyterian Churches were destroyed. The cotton-oil mill was wrecked.

Capt. George J. Terrell and wife, an aged couple, were both hurt when their house was blown away. C. C. Vaughn was seriously bruised. E. R. Sullivan and wife were both hurt. The path of the storm was several hundred yards wide.

Oak Grove, a town east of Clarksville, on the Texas & Pacific Railroad, is reported almost destroyed, many houses being demolished, but without fatalities.

STORM LASHES MEMPHIS.

Wires Blown Down and Windows Broken—Church at Mason Destroyed.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 24.—In Memphis the wind to-day reached a velocity of sixty miles an hour. It uprooted shade trees, blew down telegraph and telephone wires, and forced in plate-glass windows.

At Mason, Tenn., the Methodist Church was blown down and the parsonage adjoining that structure destroyed. The Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches were both practically destroyed and several houses were blown down.

CHARLES D. PIERCE A SUICIDE.

Prominent Civil Engineer Is Found Dead by His Housekeeper.

Charles D. Pierce, a well-known civil engineer, committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas in his apartments at 309 West Twenty-eighth Street yesterday. Continued ill health is supposed to have been the cause.

According to the Directory, Charles D. Pierce is a mechanical engineer and Consul General for the Orange Free State, with offices at 90 West Street. His name, however, does not appear in the directory of the building.

LODGE CONVENTION CHAIRMAN

Picked for Permanent Organization—Dolliver as Temporary Officer.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Republican leaders have tentatively decided to select Senator Lodge for permanent Chairman of the Chicago Convention, with Senator Dolliver as temporary Chairman. This selection is made because Senator Dolliver is a stump speaker of unusual attainment. Senator Lodge is one of the most accomplished parliamentarians in the Senate. He has a good speaking voice and a thorough knowledge of organization.

OWNER SPENT $25,000 TO WIN

Winning Driver Said to Have Got a Bonus of $5,000 for His Work.

STAMFORD, Conn., April 24.—John H. Tyson, owner of the Isotta car that won the Briarcliff race, received an ovation here to-night when he drove up to the Hotel Carlton with his friend, Fred Utoff of New York, one of his chauffeurs, and a mechanic. Louis Strang was not with the party.

Miss Grace Starr, Mr. Tyson's fiancée, was with the party. The crowd lifted Tyson out of the car, and he made a speech, giving Strang credit for the victory.

Tyson spent $25,000 to win the trophy, it is said, and Strang received $1,000 and a bonus of $5,000 from Mr. Tyson. Marcus got $500 and a bonus. Tyson was cheered when he left the hotel, and a hundred boys swooped down on him and would not let him go until he tossed a handful of coins in the air.

Strang spent five weeks at Briarcliff preparing for the race. He used Mr. Tyson's six-cylinder Ford in the preliminary practice, most of which was put in in the early morning hours, while the other drivers were sleeping.

The Isotta which Strang drove in the race, was taken over the course only twice before the contest. After the tuning-up spin it was locked in Mr. Tyson's garage at White Plains, and an employe stood guard over it night and day.

Strang is an American. He was born in Amsterdam, N. Y.

SARTORI ARRESTED.

Paul Sartori, the Italian driver, while coming down Riverside Drive at dusk last evening in the Bianchi car in which he finished fifth in the Briarcliff race, was arrested for exceeding the speed limit. Policeman Moser said the car was going at the rate of twenty-one miles an hour. The policeman caught Sartori at 115th Street.

The stopping of the car attracted considerable attention and the auto was soon surrounded by a curious crowd, which followed policeman and prisoner to the West 125th Street Station House. Lieut. Mehan, on desk duty, asked Sartori if he had $100 to put up as bail. Sartori replied that he did not have that much money and was being led into the rear room when Arlington C. Hall of 124 West Eightieth Street, an automobile enthusiast, gave bail.

TOM GAY BACK TO NEW YORK.

Waiter Who Got Ranch from D. H. Moffatt Yearns for White Way.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., April 24.—Tom Gay has started back to wicked old New York.

"I feel too loose out yonder," says Tom. "I feel like a wild steer, or something, and I want a cramped space. I want lights, and I want laughter, and I want song, and you don't find that stuff out yonder where the mountain peaks scratch their backs against the turquois sky. As for me, I'll have the good old, wide White Way, where the folks shave close and keep looking behind 'em and don't have time to be very good. I want to be cramped."

So Tom's gone back.

RUSH FOR RAILROAD BONDS.

Pennsylvania's New York Allotment Ten Times Oversubscribed.

The subscriptions received by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. up to the close of business yesterday for the $40,000,000 of Pennsylvania Railroad 4 per cent. bonds, which the bankers are offering at 96, though they are now quoted in the open market around 99, were said to amount to $200,000,000, or ten times the amount of the issue which is expected to be allotted in this country.

Of the entire issue, it is believed that at least half will be placed in the foreign markets through N. M. Rothschild & Sons and Baring Brothers & Co., who are offering the bonds in London simultaneously with the offering by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. here.

The bankers would not discuss the amount of the subscriptions, but the $200,000,000 figure was accepted as correct.

LAURA BIGGAR NOW EDITOR.

Former Actress Owns the Local Paper in Albuquerque, N. M.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 24.—Laura Biggar Bennett, the former actress and widow of Henry M. Bennett, the Pittsburg theatrical manager, arrived this morning and registered at "Editor Daily Sun, Albuquerque, New Mexico." For Mrs. Bennett is now an editor.

She went to Albuquerque two months ago, fell in love with the climate, bought the local daily with a part of the $250,000 she got from the Bennett estate, and has "made good," to use her own expression.

"I have the bulliest staff of reporters and editors ever gathered under one roof in a New Mexico town," said Mrs. Bennett. "We are for civic improvements, and for good government, and all that kind of thing, and we print the news, and roast the politicians whenever they need it."

PET BULLDOG MANGLES CHILD

Girl So Badly Injured She May Lose a Leg—The Animal Shot.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 24.—While playing with a pet bulldog near her home, 310 Morris Avenue, here, to-night, Bessie Berglund, 8 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Berglund, was bitten so severely on the right thigh that she will probably have to have her leg amputated to save her life. It was necessary for Frank Scheer, a neighbor, to shoot the dog before he would release his grip.

The bulldog was owned by the McDonald family, neighbors of the Berglunds, and was a general favorite with the children of the neighborhood. Several children were playing with the dog when he suddenly attacked the Berglund girl. The girl was taken to the Elizabeth General Hospital.

BRIARCLIFF TROPHY RACE.

DISTANCE 240 MILES—FOR STOCK CARS.

Won by Louis Strang, driving a 50 H. P. Isotta-Frascini car, owned by J. H. Tyson; time, 5 hours 14 minutes 13 1-5 seconds; average speed, 46 miles an hour.

Second—Emanuel Cedrino, driving a 60 H. P. Fiat car, owned by the Fiat Company; time, 5 hours 21 minutes 5 2-5 seconds; average speed, 45 miles an hour.

Third—Guy Vaughan, driving a 30-60 H. P. Stearns car, owned by Wyckoff, Church & Partridge; time, 5 hours 28 minutes 29 2-5 seconds; average speed, 44 miles an hour.

Fourth—Herbert Lytle, driving a 50 H. P. Apperson car, owned by Apperson Brothers; time, 5 hours 39 minutes 15 2-5 seconds; average speed, 42¾ miles an hour.

Fifth—Paul Sartori, driving a 50 H. P. Bianchi car, owned by Percy Owen; time, 5 hours 53 minutes 45 3-5 seconds; average speed, 40 miles an hour.

The official times exclude the ten-minute control at Mount Kisco on each round.

Fighting continuously for over six hours to hold its position at the head of the line of racing automobiles that circled the thirty-two-mile Briarcliff course in Westchester County yesterday, Louis Strang, driving the 50-horse-power Isotta Fraschini, won the first American stock-car road race and the Briarcliff Trophy in a convincing and meritorious manner. Starting fourth of the machines entered in the race, the Italian car assumed the lead before half of the first circuit had been completed, and flashed first past the line in the first lap, cheered by the thousands of automobile enthusiasts gathered at Briarcliff Manor to watch the contest.

From that time on to the finish of the race the Isotta car held its position tenaciously, never yielding the lead for an instant, while it gradually wore down the laggards in the long procession that went round and round the course in an effort to complete the 240 miles prescribed by the regulations of the competition, until it had lapped half of the other contestants and stamped itself as a remarkable example of the efficiency of the present day stock car. The winner's official time was 5 hours 14 minutes and 13 1-5 seconds.

How much of the triumph was due to the excellence of the machine and how much to Strang's wonderful handling of the car even experts will discuss and disagree about for a long time. Strang certainly gave a most surprising exhibition of skill. Those spectators who love the thrill of a dangerous turn and the heightened heartbeat caused by a shaving of a nasty obstacle in the path of a racing car gathered at the so-called danger points about the course to see what accidents might occur to the foolhardy men engaged in the unique road test.

But they looked in vain for any recklessness on the part of Strang. He took every dangerous curve with the utmost caution and nicety of judgment, suiting his pace perfectly to the limits of safety, yet losing not an instant of precious time at any turn. But in the stretches where bursts of speed were possible Strang let out his Italian racing motor to its full capacity on every round, and drove along at a pace hair-raising to the nervous onlooker.

Ideal Test for Road Cars.

By a combination of smooth running motor, well constructed machine, and skillful handling Strang carried away the honors and proved that the claims of the Briarcliff promoters that the hard and hazardous circuit afforded the best possible trial for cars competing for popular favor on typical American roads, and not the banked track of Brooklands or other saucer tracks, were well founded. And it was not Strang alone who made good this claim. The twenty-two cars entered in the contest amazed even seasoned and experienced automobile experts, who looked to see half of them disabled by accident or excessive strain before the race was half over, and who were willing to wager that not more than six cars would be running when the winner crossed the finish line.

Next to Strang and very little behind him in the creditable handling of his car was Emanuel Cedrino in his Fiat car. The favorite of the vast crowd to win the race, Cedrino justified the confidence reposed in him, even though he just failed to finish in the van. He won second place, however, after three very remarkable rounds at the finish of the race, moving up from fifth, where he had been relegated by some early misfortunes. Right behind him was Guy Vaughan with the American built Stearns, from whom he wrested second place, and next came Herbert Lytle, in the American-built Apperson car, who was knocked out of his chance for second place by tire trouble at a critical time on the sixth round, never being able to regain his position. Sartori in the Bianchi car also completed the full distance, but on the next to last round the Italian was in eighth position, and had more cars been allowed to finish he

REVOLTERS TO PLAN CONNERS' DOWNFALL

RUMP CONVENTION UNLIKELY

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, N. Y., April 24.—This old town, where somebody has said "a politician grows on every blade of grass," will ring to-morrow with Democratic denunciation of State Chairman William J. Conners, Tammany Leader Charles F. Murphy, their followers, and the methods they employed at the Carnegie Hall convention to make secure their control of the Democratic State organization.

Announcement was made here to-night that about thirty of the sixty-one counties in this State would be represented at the Democratic conference to-morrow to voice a protest against the action of the State Convention in throwing out a majority of the McCarren delegates from Kings as well as a number of delegates from other parts of the State.

The proceedings will probably be opened by ex-Judge Samuel A. Beardsly, who, with ex-District Attorney Edward E. Coatesworth of Erie and Charles F. Rattigan of Auburn, signed the call for the gathering. Mr. Coatsworth has since decided not to attend, failing to obtain the support of the Erie County organization.

There is a wide divergence of opinion as to the best means of making the protest effective. Democrats here who will participate in the proceedings declare that the fullest opportunity will be afforded for free expression and that it will be a truly Democratic gathering, but whether it will be a revolt or merely a protest, no one is willing to say.

City Judge James K. O'Connor, who declared a few days ago that if State Chairman Conners showed his face in Utica he would have him arrested as a suspicious person, has taken a prominent part in arranging for the conference. Judge O'Connor was the only man elected on the Democratic ticket last Fall. In discussing the prospective conference, he said to-night:

No Plan Arranged.

"Nobody could tell to-night what the outcome of to-morrow's gathering will be.

"It seems to me, though, that only two courses are open. We should either have a second convention and send a contesting delegation to Denver, or content ourselves with a protest at this time, to be followed by a fight at the Fall primaries.

The arrival of Senator McCarren, who will be here to-morrow, is looked forward to with a great deal of interest. That his advice will carry great weight with the conference is generally admitted.

Senator McCarren has expressed himself repeatedly against a "rump" convention, but has declared that he intends to go to Denver with his ousted delegates and place his case in the hands of the National Convention.

Late to-night it was learned that the conference in all probability would confine itself to the promulgation of an address to Democrats in this State, protesting against the highhanded conduct of Chairman Conners, and then adjourn after appointing a small working committee, with full powers, to take any action circumstances may seem to require in the period elapsing before the National Convention.

CONNERS HOLDS ERIE FIRM.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 24.—Finding that he was unable to obtain the support of the party organization here in his fight against the methods and policies of State Chairman Conners and Leader Murphy, County Chairman Edward E. Coatesworth declined the invitation to go to Utica for the Democratic conference to be held there to-morrow.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 24.—The Executive Committee of the Democratic County Committee, of which State Committeeman Patrick E. McCabe is the leader, met to-night and voted not to send a representative to attend the meeting of Democrats expected to be held at Utica to-morrow to protest against the action of the recent Democratic State Convention, especially in regard to the selection of members of the State Committee.

LITTLETON IN A NEW FIRM.

Now a Partner in O'Brien, Boardman, Platt & Littleton.

Announcement was made yesterday that Martin W. Littleton, former Borough President of Brooklyn, and counsel for Harry K. Thaw, has become a member of the law firm of O'Brien, Boardman & Platt of 2 Rector Street.

The name of the firm will be O'Brien, Boardman, Platt & Littleton, the other members of it being ex-Chief Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, Albert B. Boardman, and Frank H. Platt.

TAFT TO HURRY TO PANAMA.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Secretary Taft is going down to the Canal Zone next week to try to smooth out the troubles that have arisen in the Republic of Panama. The decision to have him go at once was reached at the Cabinet meeting this morning.

There are three kinds of trouble in the Panaman Republic—friction with the Canal Commission, elections set for July 4, and a boundary dispute with Colombia. The Panamans never have taken kindly to the commissary arrangements of the Canal Commission, which, they contend, keep from them a great amount of trade with canal workmen. There has been constant friction over this question.

In politics President Amador is engaged in the effort to turn over his office to Señor Obaldia, but the outs do not agree to that programme. They came near stirring up a revolution last year, but Secretary Taft got down there in time to sit on the lid. The boundary dispute is due to the seizure of a town in Panama's jurisdiction.

The Panama trip took the Taft political managers here completely by surprise. A number of engagements for the Secretary had been made, covering the three weeks he will be away. Word went out this afternoon cancelling them.

The Secretary will leave Washington on April 30 and sail from Charleston, S. C., on the cruiser Prairie May 1. She will cary a company of marines, destined for duty on the Isthmus. Mr. Taft expects to get back to this country about May 20.

NO DETAILS FROM JEROME.

But Now He Excepts Certain Newspapers from His Criticisms.

District Attorney Jerome returned to his office in the Criminal Court Building from the automobile races at Briarcliff at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Reporters were waiting to interview him on his speech delivered at the dinner of St. George's Society at the Waldorf the night before, in which he attacked the newspapers of the city.

The District Attorney was immediately beset with a cross fire of questions from the reporters around him.

"I haven't read the papers," he said, sharply, "and I'm in need of sleep. It is foolish of you to expect me to answer questions on things published in the papers when I have not read the papers."

He did say, however, that he had not meant his criticism to apply to all the newspapers. Certain ones, which he named, were clean and fair. Of the others he spoke again much as he had spoken in his published speech.

NOW LEGALLY FRIGANZA.

Actress, with the Court's Aid, Divorces Herself from Delia O'Callahan.

By grace of County Judge Dike in Brooklyn, Miss Delia O'Callahan, onetime of the sunflower belt out in Kansas, yesterday became legally Trixie Friganza of Bensonhurst in the own-your-own-home region of the rubber plant borough. Miss Friganza, as she now legally is, and long has been on the stage, asked the court for an absolute divorce from the name Delia O'Callahan on the ground that it annoyed her to have it around and got in her way when transacting business. The gallant Judge Dike sympathized and signed an order.

HORSES STAMPEDE AT FIRE.

Blaze Does $20,000 Damage to India Wharf Brewing Co.'s Plant in Brooklyn

Fire last night burned out a greater part of the third floor of the India Wharf Brewing Company's building in Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn, doing damage estimated at $20,000 and causing the sending in of three alarms. Adjoining the brewery is the company's stables in which were 100 horses. The police turned the horses loose, and they stampeded in terror through the neighborhood, but no one was hurt.

The building, a three-story brick, occupied the irregular plot of ground between Hamilton Avenue, Conover, and India Wharf Streets. About 9 o'clock fire was discovered in an elevator shaft leading to the grain drying room on the third floor. It was two hours before the fire was under control.

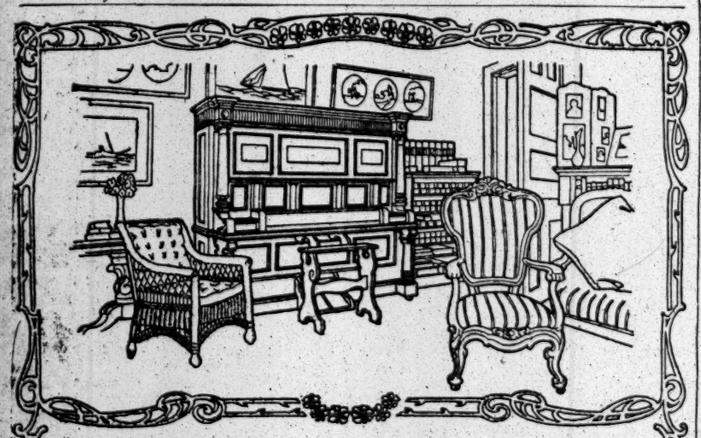
It was hard work to drive the terror-stricken horses out of the stable. It took long hours of work to round up all of them.

Towing In Disabled Liner.

HALIFAX, N. S., April 25.—The signal station at Camperdown at 12:45 o'clock this morning reported that two large steamers, one in tow of the other, were approaching the harbor. It is thought that the towed steamer is the disabled French liner Broiz Huel, bound from Dunkirk to New York, which has been adrift for nearly two weeks.

Maria Townsend Estate Divided.

MINEOLA, L. I., April 24.—The will of Maria Townsend of Oyster Bay, just filed in the Nassau County Surrogate's office, divides an estate of more than $100,000 between five heirs, Charles DeKay, Maurice C. Roberts, Edward Nicholl, and Soloman Townsend.



"AN INSTRUMENT OF DISTINCTION"

The ORCHESTRELLE

Impressively beautiful in its proportions and design, the Orchestrelle enhances even the most elaborate scheme of interior decoration.

Utilizing the modern method of playing by means of perforated music-roll, it calls for no musical skill on the part of its performer, and is thus typical of the present demand for instruments available to all.

And lastly, owing to its power to produce effects similar to both those of the orchestra and the pipe-organ, it is capable of rendering musical compositions of far greater scope and grandeur than has ever hitherto been possible in any but the largest and most expensive homes.

FLEET OFF TO-DAY FOR SANTA BARBARA

Flower Shows, Dances, and Battles Planned for Men of 16 Battleships.

SAN FRANCISCO'S PARADE

Army to be Represented in Procession of 8,000 Sailors—Farewell Tour of Los Angeles in Autos.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 24.—The scattered divisions of the American battleship fleet will reassemble early to-morrow and continue their journey toward San Francisco, where the great review of the combined Atlantic and Pacific Fleets is to be held on May 8.

A run of seven hours to-morrow will bring the fleet to Santa Barbara for a five days' stay. Flower shows, flower parades, flower battles, dances of the flowers, informal dances on the canvas-covered boulevard fronting the ocean for the men of the fleet, and formal dinners, receptions, and balls for the officers, together with a widely varied programme of sports and games, have been arranged at this resort.

A visit at Monterey and one at Santa Cruz, together with a daylight call at Port Harford, just off San Luis Obispo, will be made before the fleet reaches San Francisco, where ten full days of feasting and revelry in addition to a land display which will eclipse the big parade at San Diego in the number of men in line, and a review of forty-six vessels of war in San Francisco harbor by Secretary of the Navy Metcalf, will bring to a close California's share in the welcome of the battleships to the Pacific Coast.

Afte San Francisco comes a jaunt to Puget Sound, with calls at Seattle and Tacoma, and then the ships return to the city within the Golden Gate to prepare for their long cruise around the world.

The two branches of the military service have thus been united in the celebration of the visit. The army also will be largely represented in the parade of the 8,000 bluejackets and marines in San Francisco. A parade of one-half of the Atlantic fleet brigade will be a feature of the stay at Santa Barbara.

To-day more than 3,000 sailors took a farewell tour of the city in automobiles.

moved. She asked me if there was anything wrong, and I recall that I replied: 'The boy has made good.' Then I added, in fun, "Anybody who can make my daughter as happy as that I'd be willing to work for myself.'

"You all know of the opposition that the Duke met in seeking the hand of Miss Shonts. Well, in that year and a half he showed himself so much of a man that we all had grown very fond of him. He convinced us of his sincerity and devotion, and after the marriage he proved an ideal husband."

Mr. Shonts had just arranged with President Underwood of the Erie Railroad and President Evans of the Wells-Fargo Express Company that the Duke should be appointed general European representative of those two concerns. The London representative of the Wells-Fargo Express had planned to sail to-morrow to confer with the officials on this side of the water about the work to be laid out for the Duke. Mr. Shonts had received a cable from his son-in-law indicating a desire to be at the task as soon as possible. After he had told about this circumstance yesterday Mr. Shonts added:

"I'll take back those unkind words I uttered against him month after month before the marriage, for I'd been getting more and more to think him a real good fellow and a real man. What had delighted me particularly was the willingness that the Duke showed to get down to work, and to work with vigor. Several of the officers of the Wells-Fargo Company had spoken to me about this trait in his make-up."

The death of the Duc de Chaulnes brings to an end a most picturesque romance. His marriage on Feb. 15 followed a courtship that had triumphed over almost every form of parental opposition. The Duke met Miss Theodora Shonts in Paris, where both the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Shonts were educated. Nothing was heard of an attachment publicly until the Duke himself announced to THE TIMES correspondent in Paris that he was engaged to the younger of the two girls. That was in 1906, when Mr. Shonts was Chairman of the Panama Canal Commission. The announcement of the young Parisian brought no denial more positive than that of Miss Shonts herself on her return from Panama.

"Not guilty," she said, when told of it. Then various details of the preliminary acquaintance became social gossip. It appeared that Mrs. Shonts and her daughters had spent a part of the preceding year in Paris, accumulating a wardrobe for the coming out of the young ladies, and during this visit the Duke had paid much attention to Miss Theodora. His standing in Paris society placed him in a position where his attentions were altogether acceptable. His sister, the Duchesse d'Uzes, wife of the fourteenth Duke of that name, took the visitors under her wing, with the result that they became a great social success in Paris.

When the first news came of an engagement, Mr. Shonts backed up his daughter's denial by an unmistakable explanation that he didn't desire to have a foreigner for his son-in-law.

Mrs. Shonts, on the other hand, was frankly in favor of the young Frenchman from the start, and in an early interview on the subject said:

"The Duc de Chaulnes is a man of most estimable qualities and fine character. He is one who commands admiration, not only for his personality, but by his mental gifts. I thoroughly approve of him. I am not one of those who deplore international marriages. True, there have been a few that have been disastrous, but it has been my observation that the greater number have been successful."

The Duke came to America, and it became obvious that Miss Theodora Shonts thought as her mother did. Then followed a family campaign to change Mr. Shonts's position, which ended last November. The wedding ceremony was performed at the Shonts home, 123 East Thirty-fifth Street, on Feb. 15. The marriage agreement was drawn up for Mr. Shonts by Paul D. Cravath, and not a dollar of settlement was made upon the son-in-law. Mr. Shonts then explained that it was his elder daughter who had changed his mind. At first she had been as much opposed as he was.

The Duke's full name and titles were Emenuel Theodore Bernard Marie d'Albert de Luynes d'Ailly, ninth Duc de Chaulnes and de Picquiny and Marquis of Dangeau. He was born in Paris in 1878, and lived in the Avenue Van Dyke in the Parc Monceau Quarter. His château was in the Department of the Sarthe.

The Duke was a familiar figure in sporting circles in Paris, and he was well known for his interest in athletics. He was a member of the Cercle de la Rue Royale, Cercle Hoche, and of the Société Sportive de l'Ile de Puteaux. He came of a very old and distinguished family. The Dukedom was established in 1621, and after the title had twice become extinct it was re-established in 1869 in favor of the late Duke's father, the late Paul d'Albert de Luynes, brother of the Duc de Luynes, who died when his only son was 3 years old.

The Duke's mother was Princess Sophie Augustinova Gallitzin, who was noted for her beauty. She survived her husband only two years. The young Duke and his sister Therese, who is his senior by two years, and in 1904 married the Duc d'Uzes, were brought up in the family of their aunt, the Dowager Duchesse de Luynes.

The Duke inherited a fine patrimony from both his father and his grandmother, but it was generally understood that he had expended much of his fortune, and he was said to have been financially embarrassed before his wedding with the American heiress.

JACOB Ruppert

LAGER BEER, BOTTLED AT THE BREWERY

WOODRUFF THEATRE PARTY.

For the State Chairman's Wedding Day, Not for Anti-Hughes Plotting.

There was no "conference of anti-Hughes Republican leaders" last night, as scheduled, except such as may have taken place between the acts of a theatrical performance, or at an after-theatre supper. A story to the effect that such a conference was to be held and that plans were to be discussed for the elimination of Gov. Hughes as a Presidential possibility, was published yesterday.

The facts of the matter were, according to Congressman Herbert Parsons, who was regarded as one of the anti-Hughes conferrees, that Timothy L. Woodruff, State Chairman, and another so-called anti-Hughes man, celebrated his wedding anniversary last night with a little theatre party. Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff and Mr. and Mrs. Parsons composed the party originally. Mr. Woodruff, however, learned that William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, was in town, and that, by one of those strange coincidences which sometimes occur, was to attend the same theatre. Mr. Woodruff invited Mr. Barnes to be of the party.

HEARST WATCHER TESTIFIES.

Gets $4 a Day for Keeping Other Hearst Ballot Watchers Busy.

In the Hearst recount trial yesterday John E. Cassidy, President of the Eagle Warehouse Company of Brooklyn, testified that Deputy Attorney General Firestone was one of a number who had entered the room where the boxes are stored. There were several Hearst watchers in the party, he said. They were in the room several hours.

Herman C. Hagedorn told of the visit of Deputy Attorney General Rathbourne to the Richmond storage rooms, where the ballots for Richmond County are stored.

George Palmer, who had charge of some of the Hearst ballot box watchers, said that he gets $4 a day from Mr. Hearst, and that his job is to see that the men employed by Mr. Hearst remain at their posts of duty. He said that he had visited the Mott Street storage place, but that he had never seen any loose ballots on the floor or under a steam pipe, as President Dooling of the Board of Elections testified. The hearing will go on Monday.

DEADLY SNAKE HERE; IT CURES INSANITY

later with a live specimen of the Surukuku.

"Like the fearless scientist that he was, Dr. Hering took the snake and began to experiment," said Dr. Runyon. "The natives fled as soon as they had deposited the box with the snake in it before Dr. Hering's tent. The doctor took a lump of sugar and allowed the snake to bite it, instilling the poison into the sugar. He ate a little of the sugar and was taken violently ill with delirium. But in a day or two he was all right again. He got his wife to tell him what he did and said in his delirium, and from what she told him made a diagnosis of the symptoms.

"The virus from that snake has been used, and is being used to the present day, by medical men of this country. In a few days the natives returned, expecting to find Dr. Hering and his wife dead, and were delighted to see them as well as ever.

"Scientists have been complaining lately that good results have not been obtained from the use of lachesis, and we determined that it was perhaps due to the age of the poison."

Dr. Runyon then told the story of his agents' attempts to get another specimen to New York and his final success. He then called the pathologists together around the box, and they viewed the reptile.

They saw through the glass a snake about four feet long, brilliantly colored and with a head like an Indian arrow.

As they looked the reptile arched its neck, as though ready to strike in a second, and some of the pathologists edged away.

The coloring of the snake is principally a glossy shade of brown. There are diamond-shaped patches of a yellowish cast along its side, the diamonds being about three inches long.

While the scientists were looking at it the lancehead shot out its forked tongue, not a pleasant sight, in spite of the glass which intervened between the reptile and those who viewed it.

Dr. Runyon explained the method of extracting the virus from the lancehead.

"The operator takes the serpent with his thumb and forefinger just behind the jaws," he said. "That is the first stage. The lancehead is a great wriggler, greater than the rattler, and is hard to hold. Then, while one operator holds the reptile, another takes a small beaker glass, the mouth of which is covered with gauze, and holds it near the snake's mouth. The serpent immediately strikes, his fangs penetrating the gauze, and the poison drops to the bottom of the beaker.

"Several times the serpent is allowed to strike, and by that time all of the venom in his poison sacks has been drained. The fluid is a yellowish liquid, which rapidly dries, and will decompose if mixed with alcohol. Before the serpent is allowed to strike the gauze the beaker is weighed. After the poison has been dropped into the glass it is weighed again by the most delicate scales. To the fluid is added sugar or milk.

Keeper Snyder's Way of Handling It

"Keeper Snyder at the Bronx Park reptile house handles this lancehead as if it was a garden snake. He is the most fearless man I ever saw handling a dangerous reptile. When he handled it to-day he placed a stick over the snake, then suddenly grabbed it just back of the jaws, and in an instant had it in the box with the top closed down."

Dr. Runyon said that the poison would be extracted from the lancehead on Sunday, and that Mr. Dittmars and a number of medical men would take part in the operation. The virus thus obtained will be separated into minute portions and sealed in little tubes, for distribution among medical men in this country and abroad.

The lancehead viper will not live long in captivity. The specimen in question has eaten nothing since it was captured in Brazil, more than a month ago, but shows no signs of weakness and will live for a week or more, at least. The operation of extracting its poison does not kill the snake, although it greatly weakens it.

The lancehead lives in the dense forests which skirt the banks of the Amazon near where it meets the sea. Natives are often bitten while picking ipecac. Scientists say that a human being lives only one or two minutes after the poison enters the system. The poison seems to paralyze the action of the heart and the victim stiffens and turns black.

An ox when bitten by the lancehead dies in less than five minutes.

"The lachesis is one of the greatest scourges of Northern Brazil," said Dr. Runyon, "and causes more fatalities among the natives than any other reptile or animal. It is more deadly than the Brazilian rattler, which, next to the lance head, is perhaps the most deadly of reptiles."

The poison from the Brazilian rattler is also used in the treatment of disease, but is not near so effective as that of the lancehead.

The poison which is expected to be extracted from Dr. Runyon's lancehead viper on Sunday will last fifty years, he says. He exhibited last night a small vial, containing several dozen crystal-like particles, which he told the pathologists were Brazilian rattlesnake serum, extracted from a rattler several years ago. The crystals were the color of amber. They are also used for the treatment of nervous and brain diseases.

Medical Strikebreakers Now.

Six "strikebreakers" were taken on yesterday afternoon at the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, in place of the half dozen internes who walked out on "strike" on Wednesday because their complaints about the poor quality of the food served to them had been ignored. The "strike breakers" were recruited from medical schools. Dr. Richard E. Shaw, superintendent of the hospital, declined to tell their names.

TRAPPED BY INITIALS ON STOCK RECEIPT

Broker's Clerk Arrested Charged with Forgery and Perjury as He Leaves Court.

GOT STOCK FROM A WIDOW

Told Her His Employers, E. F. Hutton & Co., Wanted to Use It—She Sues Them for $45,000.

Charles A. Bliven, a broker's clerk, of 88 Decatur Street, Brooklyn, was arrested yesterday by Detectives Flood and Fitzsimmons of the District Attorney's staff, just after he had finished testifying in a suit before Supreme Court Justice Brady and a jury. The charges against Bliven are forgery and perjury. He was taken before Magistrate Finn, in the Tombs Court, and held in $2,500 bail for examination on Monday.

The action in which Bliven had testified was that of Mrs. Harriet N. Kilmer, as administratrix of the estate of Charles E. Kilmer, her husband, against the firm of E. F. Hutton & Co., bankers and brokers, of 33 and 35 New Street, to recover $45,000 and interest from Dec. 1, 1906. Kilmer, who was a well-known lawyer in Troy, N. Y., died in 1906, leaving a large estate, but no will.

Previous to Mr. Kilmer's death he had Bliven's help in purchasing various stocks. After her husband's death Mrs. Kilmer was persuaded by Bliven, who was then in the employ of Hutton & Co., to hand him 100 New York Central shares, 100 United States Rubber shares, and 500 shares in the Columbus-Hocking Coal and Iron Company, he assuring her that the stock was to be looked after by Hutton & Co., who would pay her the dividends and allow her an extra 2 per cent. for the use of it. She received from Bliven a receipt signed with a rubber stamp, "E. F. Hutton & Co.," with the initials "J. C. W." in ink attached.

In December, 1906, Mrs. Kilmer called on Hutton & Co. and asked for the return of her stock. She was informed that the firm had transferred it with other stocks held by them for the account of H. C. Bliven, Jr., a brother of Charles A. Bliven, to the firm of Waterman, Anthony & Co., on July 16, 1906. They denied they ever held the stock under any such arrangement as she said she made with Bliven.

On the stand Charles A. Bliven swore that the arrangement as testified to by Mrs. Kilmer was made by him with and on behalf of the firm of Hutton & Co. John C. Tomlinson, who represented Hutton & Co., requested Bliven to sign the initials, "J. C. W.," and also the words "One hundred," which appeared on the checks given by Bliven to Mrs. Kilmer in payment of her dividends, and also in the receipt for the stock. The resemblance was most decided. But Bliven positively denied writing the receipt.

At the conclusion of his evidence Mr. Tomlinson and William F. S. Hart, who appeared with him, communicated with the District Attorney's office, and as a result Bliven was arrested after leaving the Court House.

MAY ASK HAFFEN'S REMOVAL.

Bronx Borough President Says He's Tired of Politics, Anyway.

There was a well-defined rumor about the City Hall yesterday to the effect that the Commissioners of Accounts would recommend the removal of Borough President Louis Haffen of the Bronx when they turn in their report on the Haffen inquiry. The report will be ready in about two weeks.

President Haffen said he had not the slightest idea as to what the Commissioners of Accounts intended to do. He said, also, that he was tired of active political life and intended to get out of it shortly.

Mr. Haffen appeared before the Grand Jury yesterday afternoon as a voluntary witness in the inquiry which the Grand Jury is now making into the conduct of his office. Assistant District Attorney Nott said the examination would be continued on Monday.

POLICE CAPTAINS ON TRIAL.

Three of the Four Accused of Failure to Close Gambling Houses.

Four Police Captains were up before Police Commissioner Bingham yesterday to answer charges of neglect of duty. They were Horatio Young of the new West Twentieth Street Station; John Cooney of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station; Stephen McDermott of the East Twentieth Street Station, and Stephen O'Brien of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station.

The charge against Capt. Young was that he was requested to go to the New York Hospital to get a statement from a man who was injured in the Union Square bomb explosion, and that he had refused to go. Capt. Young said that he had sent two policemen to the hospital to get the statement.

Capts. Cooney, McDermott, and O'Brien were charged with failure to discover, report, and prevent gambling houses in their districts. Their cases were adjourned by request of counsel.

FEDERAL PRISONER ESCAPES.

Taken to a Dentist's Under Guard, He Gets Away Hatless and Coatless.

The immigration authorities sent out a general alarm yesterday for Henri Boulanger, who has escaped from custody on Ellis Island. Henri was arrested several days ago on a Federal warrant. He had complained of trouble with his teeth, and was taken to a dentist's office and escaped from there without either hat or coat.

HIS SEWN HEART FAILS.

Robert Inglis, Stabber's Victim, Dies After Surviving 19 Days.

After living for nineteen days and seven hours with three stitches in his heart, Robert Inglis, the young Mercury Athletic Club member who was stabbed by Powel Formansky on Sunday morning two weeks ago, died in St. Joseph's Hospital this morning. Inglis had lost about forty pounds in weight since the stabbing.

An autopsy showed that the statements of Drs. Edward F. Duffy and Philip S. McCormick, who performed the operation of sewing up Inglis's heart, were correct in every detail. The wound in the heart could plainly be seen, relieving all doubt as to the reason for the operation. The organs were all affected by the septic conditions which followed the operation. The knife wound severed the cartilage of the fourth rib and was within a sixteenth of an inch of the inner chamber of the heart. The wound had closed after the operation.

It was remarked by the physicians at the autopsy that it was remarkable that Inglis had lived so long. Only five or six similar cases are on record, and the length of time the patients lived was from ten to eighteen hours.

The stabbing of Inglis arose in a street quarrel. The police believe they can bring a charge of premeditated murder against Formansky. He was arrested immediately after the stabbing.

MUST PASS ON NEW SCHOOLS.

Art Commission Has Sole Power Over Plans, Says Corporation Counsel.

John O'Brien, Acting Corporation Counsel, has written to President Winthrop of the Board of Education that designs for all new school buildings must first be approved by the Art Commission before they can be paid for. It is expected that the ruling of the Corporation Counsel will cause some delay in the erection of the eighteen or twenty new buildings now authorized at a cost of $4,000,000.

PRINCE HELIE AGAIN MEETS MME. GOULD

ANGRY AT THE REPORTERS

Impression Given That the Couple Will Be Married as Soon as Difficulties Are Overcome.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NAPLES, April 24.—When the steamer Friedrich der Grosse steamed into the harbor to-day the beautiful gulf looked like an idyllic spot for a chapter of a romance which was about to begin between Prince Helie de Sagan and Mme. Anna Gould. The sun was just rising behind smoking Vesuvius, bathing everything in a golden, rosy mist, which gradually cleared away, leaving an azure sky only rivaled by the blue of the water and the verdure of the land, which was a clear green in the morning light.

One tall man wrapped in a brown motor coat, standing at the bow of a motorboat, seemed impatiently anxious for the arrival of the steamship. He boarded it after waving his cap to a lady who answered with a handkerchief from the upper deck. Thus occurred the first salutes between Prince Helie and Mme. Gould.

The Prince hoped to be able to reach the steamer alone, but the moment he boarded it he found that reporters had already invaded the vessel. He became angry, and said to Capt. Bleeker, "If they don't quit following me I shall drown them."

Mme. Gould was quite pale, but was smiling. After the Prince had kissed her hand she took him to the saloon reserved for ladies.

The conversation between de Sagan and Mme. Gould lasted for half an hour. While they were together a woman passenger entered the room, but apologized and withdrew immediately she saw it was occupied.

Mme. Gould then took the Prince to her cabin, where he met the children. He kissed them repeatedly. Mme. Gould introduced to the Prince the detective who stood at her door, keeping a sharp eye on the reporters, and said that the presence of this man was a comfort to her. The party then had a light breakfast, and the Prince allowed the reporters to approach him, and even permitted one man to take a photograph of the children.

In order to escape curiosity the party declined to land by means of the steamship's tender. Prince Helie had a private autoboat wherein they made a short excursion on the gulf, and finally landed at an unfrequented place, from which they were taken in a motorcar to Bertolini's Hotel. The Prince had ransacked all the flower shops in the city in order to make a magnificent show in Mme. Gould's apartments. She uttered an exclamation of pleasure when she saw what he had done.

The whole day the couple seemed chiefly preoccupied in an attempt to escape notice, not leaving the hotel. Mme. Gould has an apartment of twelve rooms. Although strict secrecy is maintained, those who approached the couple received the impression that they are only waiting to overcome a few difficulties before celebrating their marriage. There is a rumor that Count Boni de Castellane, Mme. Gould's former husband, is in the city.

The tutor of Mme. Gould's children said:

"Rest assured that the marriage will occur, but nobody can say when or where, and I am not in a position to ask. My conviction rests on what I have seen and heard from Mme. Gould. I am sure it is a true love match, based on reciprocal esteem."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 24.—An apparently baseless rumor was circulated here to-night that Mme. Anna Gould and Prince Helie de Sagan had dined together this evening at the Restaurant Lucas, having just returned from Italy. It is impossible to confirm a rumor that they are already married. Members of the family of the Prince express the hope that an early anouncement will be made.

Philippine Bandits Hanged.

MANILA, April 24.—Cipheana Omongo, alias Tiducduc, and Afroniano Fernandez, noted bandits and fanatical leaders, were privately hanged at Bilibib Prison to-day. Omongo practically started the Pulajane movement in Samar. Fernandez participated in the attack on Leyte and aided in the killing of four policemen and the burning of the municipal buildings.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 24.—The report published in England to the effect that the Russian Government had ordered five warships from a firm of Clyde shipbuilders is untrue. The Admiralty has adopted the principle that all battleships should be constructed in Russia, and it is impossible that any vessels have been ordered here or abroad for this year.

BERLIN, April 24.—The railroad administration of Prussia has decided to electrify and change to a standard gauge the existing lines between Magdeburg and Leipsic and Halle and Leipsic. The total distance is 102 miles. Lignite will be burned to supply the power at one of the central power stations.

TOKIO, April 24.—A dispatch from Seoul says that M. Griffin, an English engineer at the French gold mine at Songchcen had been attacked, wounded, and robbed by Korean bandits.

BRUSSELS, April 24.—The proposal to attach a referedum clause to the Congo annexation treaty was defeated in the Chamber of Deputies to-day by 70 votes to 80.

PARIS, April 24.—Paul L. Roy, the Frenchman who is accused by his American wife, known as Glacia Calla, of the murder of her brother, George A. Carkins, at Newington, N. H., last January, was to-day examined a second time before M. Boucard. His attorney, M. Aubin, was present. Roy underwent a severe cross-examination, but he did not vary in any essential detail from the version of the killing of Carkins that he already has given to the press, namely, that he killed the man in self-defense.

PARIS, April 24.—In addition to the extradition treaty which now is being negotiated bewteen France and the United States, a preliminary discussion has been begun for a treaty defining the rights of naturalized citizens of each country.

BATTLE ON INDIAN FRONTIER.

British Lose 62 Men—Kitchener and Minto Hurry to the Front.

SIMLA, April 24.—In consequence of an attempt made by the Mohmand tribesmen to cut his lines of communication, Sir James Willcocks, the Commander of the British force sent out from Peshawur against the raiding natives, attacked the enemy this morning with two columns comprising all his available troops.

A later dispatch received here from Peshawur gives details of the situation. It says:

"The Matta was attacked last night, but the enemy was repulsed. There was heavy artillery firing this morning at Shabkadar, and Gen. Anderson's brigade fought a big engagement. Our casualties numbered 62, including several British officers.

"Lord Minto, Viceroy of India, and Lord Kitchener, Commander in Chief of the British forces in India, will arrive here to-morrow, and the British will assume the offensive as quickly as possible. Sir James Willcocks has control of 10,000 troops, comprising three brigades, two of which are concentrating on the border, the third being held in reserve at Peshawur.

"Desultory fighting is reported all along the line, fifteen miles from Michni, on the Kabul River, to Abazai, on the Swat River. Major Gen. Willcocks's centre rests on Shabkadar Fort.

LONDON, April 24.—The Government has been informed of the gravity of the Mohmand movement in India, but every confidence is felt that it soon will be suppressed, Lord Kitchener having made a timely disposition of his forces. The worst aspect of the situation is seen in the apparent complicity of the Ameer of Afghanistan. It is regarded in some quarters as an outcome of the recently concluded Anglo-Russian compact, which leaves Afghanistan free, as a buffer State, from either British or Russian agents.

SMALL NATIONS PROTECTED.

Baltic and North Sea Agreements Between Powers Given Out.

BERLIN, April 24.—The North Sea Treaty, signed here yesterday, was made public to-day. It takes the form of this joint declaration:

The Governments of Germany, Denmark, France, Great Britain, the Netherlands, and Sweden, influenced by the wish to strengthen the bonds of neighborly friendship between their States and thereby contribute toward the preservation of universal peace, concur in the conviction that their policy in reference to the lands bordering upon the North Sea aims at preserving the existing territorial status quo.

They declare, therefore, that they are firmly resolved to maintain inviolate and mutually respect the existing territorial rights of their States in these regions. If any circumstance whatever should arise which, in the opinion of one of the above-mentioned Governments, should threaten the existing territorial status quo, the signatories of this declaration will confer with each other in order to arrive at an understanding, through agreement among themselves, upon such measures as they may regard useful in the interest of preserving the present status quo of their possessions.

The chief significance attached to the declaration here is that it will disarm foreign suspicions of Germany's designs against the integrity of the Netherlands.

The declaration of Germany, Russia, Denmark, and Sweden regarding the Baltic Sea, which also was signed yesterday, was made public to-day. It is almost identica: with the North Sea declaration.

CARLOS SOLD CROWN JEWELS.

King Manuel of Portugal Will Atone for His Father's Action.

LISBON, April 24.—King Manuel has learned that $750,000 worth of the Crown jewels, which are the property of the State, were sold by his father, King Carlos, in order to defray his expenses. The administrator of the royal house declared that the Government had consented to the sale, and the Governor of the Bank of Portugal declared it had been made in order to avoid a scandal.

King Manuel then announced his intention of refunding the value of the missing jewels.

CANADA STOPS PAUPERS.

Will Not Permit England to Unload More on Her.

LONDON, April 24.—Canada has put a stop to the indiscriminate emigration to the Dominion by charitable organizations of the surplus population of London and other English cities. During the last few weeks the Canadian Immigration Commissioner in London has refused to give his sanction to the emigration of fifty persons whom the Church Army proposed to send over, giving as his reason that Canada would accept only those whose fitness as settlers he is assured of.

This policy has been rather severely criticised in England by those who believe that "Canada owes it to the empire" to take those who cannot find work here.

Amelia Bingham's Butler Arrested.

On the complaint of Mrs. Charles Naething of 267 West Seventy-second Street, Carl Erickson, a butler employed by Amelia Bingham, the actress, was arrested last night at her home, 40 East Thirty-first Street. It is alleged that on Jan. 4, Erickson, while employed by Mrs. Naething, stole a set of ivory billiard balls valued at $200, and a pair of trousers worth $15.

Raritan River Clear at Last.

The 400-foot draw span of the old Perth Amboy railroad bridge, abandoned this week on the completion of the paralleling structure, was floated away yesterday afternoon. It had not been opened since last September, because the swing pier had sunk, preventing the passage of all large vessels between the Raritan and the sea.

T. A. M'INTYRE & CO. IN RECEIVER'S HANDS

LIABILITIES ABOVE $1,000,000

Firm Suffered in the 1907 Panic Through Customers — Arthur P. Heinze a Creditor.

T. A. McIntyre & Co., members of the New York Stock and Cotton Exchanges and of five other Exchanges in this and other cities, made an assignment yesterday before the opening of business, which closed their main office at 71 Broadway and fourteen branches maintained by the firm uptown and in other cities.

Before the day was over Arthur R. Peck of Syracuse, to whom the members of the firm had assigned, was superseded by a receiver in bankruptcy appointed by Judge Holt in the Federal Court on the application of several creditors of the firm, including Lindsay Russell, as receiver for Otto Heinze & Co., whose claim against McIntyre & Co. was given in the bankruptcy petition at $9,500, standing in the name of Arthur P. Heinze.

Neither the assignee who was in charge of the firm's assets for a few hours nor the receiver, Charles C. Burlingham, who later took charge, nor their counsel, would make any statement regarding the position of the firm. In the absence of any official estimate of the firm's liabilities they were placed by the Street all the way from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Firm Caught Short in Stocks.

In support of the larger estimate stress was laid on the large amount of stock which was bought in on the floor of the Stock Exchange for the account of the failed firm. The estimates ran as high as 75,000 shares, consisting of Reading, Union Pacific, the Steel stocks, St. Paul, and other less active stocks, including "Big Four." The firm was said to have been short of all these stocks, and at the same time to have been long of cotton, which has lately suffered a serious decline. Partly as a result of these purchases the stock market was strong and more active than on any other day in a month.

Those who spoke for the firm said that the liabilities would probably not much exceed $1,000,000, and it was denied that any such amount of stock as 75,000 shares had been bought in for the firm. The sales of cotton for the firm's acounts amounted, it was said, to only 7,000 bales. In the grain market the firm had very few commitments.

The assignment, it was said, followed an all-night conference, at which wide differences of opinion arose among the members of the firm. T. A. McIntyre, the head of the firm, was said to feel that the firm could fight through. The assignment papers were signed by only three members of the firm—George C. Ryan, Edward T. White, and John G. McIntyre. McIntyre & Co. was very active on the bear side of stocks at one time, and their bearish proclivities during the recent period of stock market recovery had much to do in bringing about their failure.

A man who has been in close touch with the operations of McIntyre & Co. for a long time, who did not wish to be quoted, had this to say of the failure:

"The capital of the firm was impaired seriously during the slumps last year in March and in August and in the October panic. Losses in customers' accounts were not made good and the firm had to carry a number of heavy losses. Then, after the panic, business dropped to almost nothing, although the expenses continued, with the result that the capital was still further reduced. When on top of this a short time ago customers began to withdraw their balances a condition was soon brought about that made it impossible for the firm to weather the storm."

Another story heard in the Street, to which some color was lent by admissions made by a man close to the failed firm, was that the firm had gone short of stocks which it was carrying for customers, and that recently, when customers who sought to close their accounts demanded the stock, the firm had some difficulty in supplying them. When asked regarding the report that the members of the firm had sold stocks short in this way, a man who is closely identified with McIntyre & Co. said:

"Undoubtedly last Fall the firm sold out stocks which it was carrying for customers, but it was done merely as a matter of precaution and to no greater extent than is done under similar conditions by other houses. I don't believe there was a house in the Street last Fall which was carrying their customers' stocks."

Heinze's Claim Said to be Offset.

In reference to the claim of Arthur P. Heinze for $9,500, it was said yesterday on behalf of the firm that other members of the Heinze family owed the firm at least that much and that in effect one item offset the other.

The other creditors in whose names the bankruptcy petition was made were Peard & Co. of Baltimore, $8,316; William N. Arnold, $2,500, and Henry M. Spence as owner of an assigned claim of Mary Weston for $500. Charles C. Burlingham, who was appointed receiver, is a member of the law firm of Wing, Putnam & Burlingham. Olcott, Gruber, Bonynge & McManus acted as counsel for the petitioners.

The firm of T. A. McIntyre & Co. was formed in May, 1904, upon the dissolution of the firm of McIntyre & Marshall, which split up into two firms, one of which was headed by T. A. McIntyre. The other members of McIntyre & Co. were George C. Ryan, John G. McIntyre, who was the Exchange member; Thomas A. McIntyre, Jr., J. E. Hulshizer, James M. Hudson, and Edward T. White. Besides its main offices at 71 Broadway, the firm had branches at 309 Broadway, 516 Fifth Avenue, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, and in the Produce Exchange Building, and in these other cities: Baltimore, Albany, Binghamton, Boston, Hartford, Hot Springs, Va.; Chicago, Rochester, Syracuse, and Jersey City.

McIntyre the "Great Combiner."

Thomas A. McIntyre has been a prominent banker and broker of this city for the last twenty-five years. For a long time Mr. McIntyre was known on the floor of the Produce Exchange as "the great combiner." His most ambitious scheme was the formation of a flour trust. He is at present a Director and member of the Executive Committee of the Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Company, the Standard Milling Company, Duluth Superior Milling Company, Southwestern Milling Company, and International Elevator Company; a Trustee and member of the Auditing Committee of the New York Produce Exchange Safe Deposit and Storage Company.

A stepdaughter of Mr. McIntyre, Mrs. Lucie Mitchell, married Arnold Lawson, son of Thomas W. Lawson, in 1906.

TRANSFER GOOD ONE WAY.

Court of Appeals Decides Southbound Ticket Is Void Going North.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 24.—The Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down this afternoon, decides that a street railroad company has the right, under Section 104 of the railroad law relating to transfers, to refuse to receive a south-bound transfer on a north-bound car, thus regulating by a reasonable limitation the carriage of a passenger on a single fare.

The case at issue, that of Peter C. Kelly against the New York City Railway Company, arose out of the refusal by a conductor on the Eighth Avenue line to accept such a transfer.

The decision affects every street railroad of any considerable length in the State. The decision is by a divided court, voting five to two, the majority being Judges Gray, who writes the opinion, Haight, Vann, Werner, and W. Bartlett. The dissenting Judges are Chief Judge Cullen and Judge Chase.

General Manager Root of the New York City Railway said last night that the decision, which has been fully expected, upheld the company's right to continue the present system of transfers.

SAW FATHER DIVE TO DEATH.

Old Mr. Rettich Jumped from Window of Son's Office.

Albert Rettich, the aged father of Victor Rettich, President of the Knickerbocker Light and Heat Company, dived from the open window of his son's office, on the fifth floor of 25 West Broadway, yesterday morning, and was crushed to death on the pavement, 70 feet below. Victor Rettich and his business partner, H. R. Brayton, were in the office at the time the elder man made the dive to death, but were not quick enough to prevent it.

Ogden Heads Educational Conference.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 24.—The conference for education in the South today re-elected Robert C. Ogden of New York to the Presidency. President A. E. Alderman of the University of Virginia presented the report of the nominating committee, through which, in addition to the President, the conference chose the following officers: Vice President—J. B. Baldwin, Montgomery; Treasurer—William A. Blair, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Kitty Cheatham Off to Europe To-day.

Kitty Cheatham will sail for Europe this morning on the Zeeland, to be gone for some months. Miss Cheatham goes abroad to fill dates already made for her dramatic recitals in London and Paris. Among these engagements will be a series of three arranged by the Duchess of Marlborough and another series arranged by Mrs. Cornwallis West, formerly Lady Churchill.

East Side Children in Shakespeare.

The children of the East Side Settlement House, at Seventy-sixth Street and the East River, gave a performance of Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice" last night. The children have a dramatic society, and it was under its auspices that the production was made. The young players were trained by John Barry, who has been particularly interested in this work.

STRANG WINNER AT BRIARCLIFF

would hardly have improved upon that position.

Only Four Cars Had to Quit.

The most remarkable feature of the contest was that, at its conclusion, eighteen of the twenty-two cars were still running well, only four having fallen by the wayside. In a contest deemed most hazardous, over a course that had been execrated and decried on all sides, this small ratio of accidents, in view of the speed attained, was a wonerful tribute to the excellence of the driving.

The race was called off twenty minutes after noon, when the immense crowd that lined the course had crowded on the track too densely for safety. Referee Pardington accordingly ordered the remaining cars flagged and the contest ended. The crowding on the road was due to the beginning of the crowd's move to leave the course and the natural restlessness following the decision as to the leading positions. The movement was good-natured and not insistent, and characteristic of the throng in attendance. Except at the start there was remarkably little difficulty experienced in handling the people, and the military policing worked out admirably.

Irritation due to other causes was responsible for some trouble in the early day. Most of it came from the poor service afforded by the special trains. Trains had been advertised to leave the Grand Central Station every quarter hour for some portion of the course. They left all right, but the earliest of them took upward of three hours to make the run, which the regular service makes in a trifle over an hour. In consequence those who left New York at 1 o'clock expecting to reach the course early and readily reach the positions they had selected from which to view the race did not arrive until just before the start. Every one was fretful and hurried hither and yon with no exact idea of how to reach the appointed places, and a lot of people became jammed in the road in front of the grands stands unable to move one way or the other.

As the hour for the start approached this dense crowd was augmented by further flurried cargoes of people from the later trains who were even more impatient than the earlier comers. The racing cars came to the line at the appointed time, and found themselves unable to make their way to the judges' stand. Working gradually through the crowd, Sartori, who was to lead the way, finally did get in position, but it would have been murderous to order a start in such circumstances. A hurry call was sent out for Marshals, and 200 of the citizen soldiery, armed with canes and official insignia, answered the call. The clearing of the crowd was begun in no light-handed manner, and several brawls ensued.

Jerome Involved in a Scuffle.

In one of these Magistrate Kernochan and District Attorney Jerome became involved, and there was a scuffle in which probably a hundred men took part, with a sprinkling of women on the outskirts who were being crushed and mauled against the fences. Cool-headed men finally got the upper hand, and added persuasion to a gentle application of force, and the crowd was finally driven back enough to justify the machines in getting away. By this time, however, twenty minutes had passed beyond the scheduled time, but by briskness and good management the first car was sent away with only two minutes more delay.

It was very misty through the Pocantico Hills at 4 o'clock in the morning and very dark when the hour for starting arrived. In spite of this and the delays of trains, there were fully 100,000 spectators at various points on the course at that hour. The stream of motor cars that began to move northward from New York as early as 9 o'clock Thursday night continued to pour into the roads from White Plains, Tarrytown, and Scarborough. There was a constant tangle of cars at the points of entrance, and all were held up in line for a considerable time, but, in spite of this, by 4 o'clock a double line of machines was parked over two-thirds of the course at every available point.

Picturesque Night Scene.

The lines of cars made a most picturesque spectacle, with glaring headlights staring out into the misty night, each housing a party of autoists so keen to see the race that they were ready to stand any discomfort to gratify their desire. Interspersed with these headlights were numerous campfires blazing in fields and meadows, while seated around them, Indian fashion, groups sang and frolicked as though care was unknown to them. A stranger dropped unprepared in the midst of the scene would have thought the spectacle a gathering of gypsy clans from all over the world, regaling the night, after their state conclave, with jest and song.

The first faint indication of the approach of dawn, however, sent these parties scurrying to points of vantage, either to find seats on a particular grand stand, to join automobile parties at desirable parking spaces, or to visit the headquarters of their favorite car, to watch the final preparations of the drivers before beginning the fearful grind. Again, as the cars began to hurry to the starting line, the scene shifted quickly, and this midnight crowd became a lot of settled spectators, who might have been ensconced in the places they occupied every day in the year. Then came the first of special train throngs, and these kept piling into the course in endless arrays. Indeed, some of these trains did not arrive until three hours after the race had begun.

The contest began with the same kaleidoscopic rapidity in the change of scene as marked the other movements of the night and early dawn. Within two minutes of the clearing of the way, the first car was speeding up the hill from Briarcliff toward Echo Lake, bound for Mount Kisco, and so around the circuit. There was keen interest at this moment to see whether all the cars would be there to start. Three of the cars had the night before been required to give further assurance of their right to race under the stock car restriction. They all appeared, however, and satisfied the officials that they were entitled to start, and the twenty-two lined up as promised.

And it was a surprising variety of type displayed as the cars awaited the word. To the novitiate all motor cars look alike, especially when stripped and prepared for racing. But brought together in a line the racers presented an amazing contrast.

The variety in drivers' costumes accentuated the difference. Many-colored as the machines were, the coats of their drivers were quite as diversified. There was Sartori, the daredevil Vanderbilt Cup driver, in gray, and the famed Cedrino in crimson. Lytle wore black and Strang khaki. Leland had a black sweater, and Parker a scarlet jersey. Then came Michener, arrayed in white, and so down the line to the Simplex pair in sombre black. That black aroused some foreboding in timid minds, and the talk turned to the dangers of the course, but fortunately the word to make ready came to dissipate the gloom in a glow of expectation.

Start Made at 5:07 O'Clock.

It was just 5:07 o'clock when Fred Wagner slapped big Sartori on the back and shouted, "Go!" Instantly the clutch was thrown in and away the gray machine sped to try the hazards of the circuit. Cedrino, too, was ready for the word, and a minute later followed with a rush. Then one by one down the line at minute intervals went the great gasoline greyhounds, barely held in check by the eager hands of the drivers, until they got the word that sent them on—to what? That was the question in many minds, as the spectators thought of the perils of the race.

The day was still dull, with the sun scarce glinting through the mist, but suddenly he shown out in full glory, just as when Barney Oldfield came to the line. He was preceded by Monte Roberts on the counterpart of his New York to Paris racer that led the way across America for the foreign competitors, wearing the fringed chaps presented to him by the admiring citizens of Cheyenne on his transcontinental trip.

Barney Oldfield came to the line with his inevitable smile, to be greeted by a solid outburst of applause, the first real cheering of the day. Stuck in the midst of that happy smile was the omnipresent black cigar, unlit, but tipped skyward, as Barney answered the welcome with his quizical glance. There the cigar remained at the same angle when he went away, and there it remained throughout the race, through good fortune and ill, though the discerning thought they detected a droop in its jaunty tilt when fate conspired to keep Barney back from his accustomed place at the head of the racing line.

One other figure attracted the attention of those who recognized him when Julian Bloch came to the line with his Renault. Looking up from the mechanicians' seat was a round, cheery, bland face that caused a start, and then an exclamation, "Godard!" It was, indeed, the New York to Paris racer, driver of the Moto-Bloc, returned from his transcontinental trip by rail and occupying a new place as unconcernedly as ever.

At last the twenty-second car sputtered its way up the incline to the first turning in the road and was lost to sight, and the crowd settled back to gossip until the cars should come around again. From various points on the course the Marconi wireless reported the progress of this car and that, and the official telephones rang and hummed to try to keep up with the announcer's steady fire, but the bulletins came from here and yon and it was impossible to know absolutely which car was leading. With keen expectancy, therefore, the announcement was received, "Two cars have passed Eastview, and all craned eagerly across the fields where for an instant a flash of a car a mile or more away would tell of the identity of the first one.

Strang Takes the Lead.

The crowd looked for gray, but caught a flash of red. "Cedrino!" it cried, but it was not Cedrino. It was Strang, the winner, who had forged his way past the three that had preceded him and taken the lead, despite the narrow road and turns and hollows that held death in leash for the too daring ones who should tempt fate too far. But the turns had no terrors for Strang. He had slept on the corners for the last two months; ate, drank, and lived on them, and was ready for any venture.

So as a mighty yell welcomed the driver, the red machine shot around the curve that led into the grand stand lane, and flashed under the wire for the first round in 39 minutes and 42 seconds actual time, a pace of about 46 miles an hour. This was going some on such a road in such a car, and the announcement of the time was greeted with another cheer.

Scarcely had the voices been hushed when around the curve came another car, a gray one. There was a loud report, and the car gyrated madly from side to side as frightened cries broke from many lips. But a firm hand was at the wheel. The car was guided to one side, stopped, and Sartori and mechanician stepped out to mend a blow out in the rear wheel. Five minutes by actual time they spent, and meantime Cedrino, Leland, Parker, and Vaughan flashed by.

Scarcely was Sartori off again, with cheers ringing in his ears, than Mitchener in his Lozier duplicated his performance in precisely the same spot. It took Mitchener four minutes to make the change, and then he was away again. There were many more such incidents on that turning ere the race was over, but the crowd never lost interest in the show. Harding made the best time in repairing in this spectacular place, getting away in just three minutes after taking his turn in blowing out.

Watson Crashed Into a Tree.

All were now around the first circuit except Watson. Before he could be really missed the disquieting news came that "Watson hit a post near East View and was thrown out, with his mechanician, and the car wrecked." Later came the word, "The men were not hurt." Then followed a detailed report to the committee of the accident.

Watson was trying to make up time on a stretch approaching an abrupt "L" turn, and in rounding it hit a tree with his left front wheel. The wheel was demolished and the car overturned, breaking the seats and the steering wheel. The two men were thrown out, but both were unhurt. They found the car badly wrecked, but pluckily set to work and had the car in shape to go on when the others were half through. They ran a mighty plucky race from then on, and made a good showing, finishing ahead of four cars that had had better luck.

No sooner was the Watson accident reported than an emergency call came for a repair car, saying a bridge had broken down. This proved only to require the substitution of a plank, and a car was delayed for two minutes while the change was made.

Meantime Strang was flying around on his second circuit. Lytle was second on the first round by a bit over a minute, but Seymour had replaced him when they came around again, while Strang had opened up another minute gap. Lytle followed Seymour, and Vaughan and Murphy were fourth, tied. The little Maja car was doing nobly, and Cedrino was within hailing distance, though he had fallen seven minutes behind Strang by this time. Parker was the last man on the round, Strang having opened up 37 minutes on him.

Vaughan got into the running in the third round and displaced Lytle, but Strang and Seymour still led, with the former still another minute to the good. Poole came up strong ahead of Cedrino. As Strang came by the grand stand the fourth time word came that Watson was ready to start again, and soon he came by, getting an ovation all around the circuit for his pluck. Strang meantime had lapped Bernin and shaken off Seymour, Poole coming up with a surprising spurt to second place. Strang had then gained a full nine-minute lead, and seemed in fair way to make a runaway race of it, as he was averaging forty-six miles an hour. The other quartet were still fighting behind the Isotta pair.

Oldfield's Spectacular Stunt.

On each round Oldfield got his usual ovation, and he signalized it here by a bit of typical spectacular work. Hilliard in the Hol Tan was a length ahead of him entering the narrow grand stand stretch, but Oldfield called to pass and Hilliard turned out. There was barely room to squeeze through, but Barney took the

THE STEARNS

Best Stock Car of the World

BRIARCLIFF RACE RESULTS

First—Isotta Fraschini
Second—Fiat
Third—Stearns

In gaining third position in the race the Stearns, with a stock car as regularly sold by us, defeated all other American cars, and also the following Foreign cars:

Isotta Fraschini	Renault	Panhard
Isotta Fraschini	Fiat	Bentz

beating nine Foreign cars in all, in addition to all the seven other American cars.

¶ The Briarcliff event was an endurance contest as well as a race. The best Foreign and American drivers say that the course was the worst that had ever been picked for an automobile race. The three Stearns cars finished in perfect running condition, each car going through the race without the slightest engine trouble, the hoods were never lifted.

¶ The Stearns car is in no sense a racing machine. It is a perfect American-built touring car for American people, possessing unsurpassed endurance, as shown in this contest.

¶ The Stearns motor possesses that flexibility which enables the driver to go smoothly through congested city traffic at 6 miles an hour and develops, if desired, the greatest hill climbing power and the speed which enables him to pass through and beyond the dust of the car ahead.

Demonstrations

We will be glad to give demonstrations to intending purchasers in Stearns cars which will duplicate the speed of those in the race.

Spring Millinery Ready.

EVERYWHERE THROUGHOUT the Millinery Section busy choosing has been going on all week. To-day the showing of Spring Millinery will be at its height, and all through the display the feature will be the striking ECONOMIES that have made this Millinery season at Loeser's unprecedented.

Easter proves out the Paris styles and now is Loeser discrimination in early selection verified by later decisions of women of best taste. With each warmer day the styles show more of the grace and informality of summer and special provision has also been made in the smart Turbans and round Hats which all well dressed women are adding to their traveling outfits this year.

IN THE PARIS MILLINERY—Hats modeled directly from Paris inspiration by Paris taught fingers and made of Paris materials—constant pleasure is aroused by the large number of Hats between $18 and $25, such Hats as could hardly be matched outside of Loeser Millinery for double the prices.

UNDER $12 MILLINERY includes all manner of smart Hats for street and dress wear. Hats trimmed in our own workrooms and instinct with Loeser Millinery standards.

UNDER $5 are hosts of graceful "shirtwaist" Hats and business Hats and the like—so smart and in such good taste one never questions the price.

The Well Dressed Boy—Why He Wears LOESER Clothes.

BETTER THAN TALK ABOUT THE MERITS of Clothing is an actual demonstration. If we could SHOW every mother the sort of Clothing for boys which we have developed here, we should not have room even in the very generous quarters of the Boys' Store to accommodate those who would want to buy.

We cannot show everybody; but we can show YOU if you will come to-day with your boy and let him put on some of this Loeser Clothing. We can show you Clothes that have distinctive style; that give a boy a manly look; that are ample in fullness; that are so thoroughly well made inside as well as outside that they will HOLD THEIR SHAPE through an active season of school and play.

These stocks of Clothes are not bought from wholesale makers in the usual way. A knowledge of fabrics and linings and workmanship and every detail of cost makes it possible for us to get Clothing made in SPECIAL ways—and at the same time to keep the prices down as low or even lower than the prices of the ordinary boys' Clothing that you find everywhere.

The stocks are complete. Here are suggestions:

plunge without the quiver of an eyelash, and, as usual, got away with the trick amid loud applause. Just ahead of him were Harding and Mulford, and Oldfield set out as though to run right over them, but the curve in the road fortunately hid them before he could catch them and it was not necessary to do any more stunts.

With six cars still to complete the fourth round, Strang came around on his fifth. Still going at the same clip with no worry and absolute regularity, he shot past the stand, getting the usual ovation. Lytle, meantime, had passed Poole and Vaughan and was in second place, while Cedrino began to show his speed. On the sixth round Cedrino was third and Lytle had dropped back to fourth and Vaughan had taken second place.

Just before the sixth round started word came of a mishap to Murphy. The plucky driver of Mayor Brown's little car had been thrown out with his mechanician, but both had escaped injury. It happened near Valhalla, a wheel collapsing under him and smashing the car. It was the first to actually go out of the race. But there were others soon to follow. Parker was one of them. It soon developed that a cylinder had cracked and the second Fiat had retired.

Then, on the next round, the Allen-Kingston, which turned turtle with Campbell and De Palma, did another trick. An axle broke and ditched the car, De Palma and his mechanician going into soft mud, again escaping injury. Finally, Mulford's Lozier was missed, and it was learned that a hurry ambulance call had come from Valhalla. This created much excitement, but reassurances were soon received. In attempting to crank his machine, Mulford had let the crank slip, and it flew around and struck him on the foot, crippling him. His toe was broken and the car could not continue. This was the last car withdrawn from the race. The Simplex, driven by Watson, now going well, passed all four in the official records and showed good possibilities had it not been for its early misfortune.

Strang Wins by Seven Minutes.

The contest had now narrowed down to a fight between Strang, Cedrino, Lytle, and Vaughan, with Seymour an outside chance. Strang's lead was such that, barring accident, he could not well be overtaken. And there was no accident. Cedrino, by his remarkable spurt on the last three laps, cut short the aspirations of Vaughan and Lytle, though Vaughan managed to hold third place. There was a chance of Seymour getting a place, but before his car could reach the finish line it was necessary to stop the race.

Seven minutes separated Strang and Cedrino at the end, and Cedrino had as much a margin over Vaughan. Vaughan beat Lytle home by seven minutes. The Bianchi, which started first, squeezed in before the race was stopped, though it was eighth on the previous round and the others might have beaten it out had they had the chance. Sixteen cars finished seven rounds, and one more the sixth round. Watson was on his sixth when the race was stopped.

The instant the race was over the crowd swarmed up on the road on foot and in autos. Then began a hurried scramble for trains and a mad rush to get there first. The train service going up was bad enough, but coming back it was worse. Some trains arrived in New York after 5 o'clock in the afternoon, though the race was officially called off at 12:20 o'clock. That wasn't going much for thirty miles, the crowd voted.

On the roads leading to New York the rush of automobiles was terrific. The dust they kicked up was so dense it was impossible to see ahead, and it was remarkable that so few accidents occurred. Coming down many had their own troubles. One autoist counted sixty-three cars laid up beside the road at different points with tire troubles, and not a third of the cars had started away.

No passenger through the alkali deserts of the West ever looked more bedraggled and dust worn than the men and women that rode through that rush. A miller would have suggested a dark cloud in comparison. But though tired out with their thirty-six hours without sleep every one was happy and pleased with the race, and that was the most they cared for.

DETAILS OF THE CONTEST.

Strang Earned His Honors—Italian Cars First and Second.

Maintaining a speed a shade better than forty-six miles an hour for an actual running distance of 240 miles Strang won a notable triumph in the Briarcliff Cup auto race. In every way the contest was better than the most sanguine competitor or those who had been promoting the event for months had hoped for.

Strang, starting in fourth place, took the lead in the first lap, and held it grimly to the finish. At one time he had a lead of 12 minutes and 55 seconds, at the end of the fifth lap when Lytle, in the Apperson, was second. After that his lead was gradually cut down, Guy Vaughn taking second at the end of the sixth lap, but for the final laps Cedrino, with his big red Fiat, was the severest rival that Strang encountered during the day, and he only won by 6:52 2-5. Cedrino averaged 45 miles an hour, and though he did not win he carried off the honor of making the two fastest single laps of the day.

The Isotta and Fiat machines are both Italian-made cars, so the foreigners had the best of it; in fact, Italy and America were the only nations represented among the five cars that finished, for Guy Vaughn was third with the Stearns, Herbert Lytle fourth with the Apperson, while the Italian Bianchi, driven by Sartori, was fifth. Had the race been prolonged the Simplex, driven by Seymour, had an excellent chance of taking the fifth position, for by elapsed time at the end of the seventh lap it was in fifth place, while Sartori was rated eighth. Leland's Stearns being sixth and Al Poole's Isotta seventh.

When the officials declared the race off it had been going continuously for over seven hours. The excitement was waning, the crowd becoming uneasy, and a number of automobiles packed on both sides of the grand stand were preparing to leave. The committee therefore wisely decreed that nothing more was to be gained by continuing the contest.

Five Cars Make Big Averages.

The fact that five cars actually finished the race, when many indications had been made that barely that number would be in the running at the end, and that all of the five cars averaged over forty miles an hour—Vaughan's Stearns making an average of forty-four and Lytle averaging forty-two—were among the surprising and pleasing features of the race. Strang's forty-six-mile-an-hour Isotta was apparently in as perfect running condition at the end of its arduous journey over the most difficult course ever selected for an automobile race in this country as at the start. Its engine was running perfectly, and the car spun over the roads with an ease and smoothness that suggested luxurious country touring.

Strang made four laps of the eight in thirty-eight minutes and a fraction each, the best possible indication that he was the master of his car and that its mechanism was as perfect as automobile ingenuity could devise. Cedrino made a gallant effort to overhaul his rival in the last two laps. His progress was one of steady progression throughout the race. Finishing the first round in thirteenth place, he jumped to sixth in the next lap, held it in the third, advanced to fifth in the fourth and fifth laps, third in the sixth, and by making the two fastest laps of the race in the last two laps leaped to second place. Cedrino's last lap was made in 36:48 3-5, the best of the day, but his seventh lap was nearly its equal—37:29, allowing for the ten minutes that had to be deducted for the control at Mount Kisco.

"It has been a magnificent race," said Mr. Morrell, Chairman of the Manufacturers' Committee in charge of the race. "I had hoped to see some high speed made, but hardly expected to see so many cars finish at such excellent averages. The dry weather, however, of the last few days put the road in excellent condition. The race was a grand test of driving skill, and as a practical test of what stock cars can endure the event presented one of the strongest object lessons of the efficiency of the modern motor car that has been given for some time."

THE RACE FROM EAST VIEW.

Scenes at Most Dangerous Curve—Two Slight Accidents.

The crowd that gathered along the mile-and-a-half-stretch, from the inadequate grand stand near the Eastview railroad station, where there was a sharp skidding right angle in the course, to the "S" and "L" shaped descent from Valhalla, had a distinct point of view which marked it from the other crowds at other portions of the oiled track.

It was still so early that all dull colors appeared as drabs when the marshals on the course with the little red flags began to agitate their banners. From far up in the level country above the "S and L" hill there came the sound of the exhaust of four gasoline cylinders, whose muffler had been cut out. The crowd's eyes were fastened upon the top of the hill. At its crest appeared a gigantic numeral "2," and then the dulled outlines of the Fiat car, driven by Cedrino. It rushed down the first curve of the "S" as though determined to make time even upon the bad stretches. The crowd yelled in delight.

Car Slows Down; Crowd Hoots.

"There's going to be a spill, watch," was shouted from the roadside.

Of a sudden there was a quick movement of a lever and then the sound of metal grinding upon metal. Like a quiet family horse the car slowly went down the rest of the way to the main road.

The crowd yelled in derision while the driver was exhorted to "hit it up." But he didn't hit it up until he was safely out of the "S and L," and on the hard macadamized, slightly curved descend that led to the turn before the railroad station. Then he opened up wide. But the crowd wasn't with him. After the Fiat had made this latter turn it was still in sight for those on the "S and L" hill for several miles. But its lightening speed over this far-away bit didn't win any enthusiasm from that set of spectators.

When the Bianchi, the Apperson, and the others kept the same baby-like pace down the hill there was a similar lack of cheering. The Isotta, driven by Strang, however, drove more recklessly down the hill. Then the crowd let itself out. When a little later Car 21—the Simplex driven by Seymour—skidded around the "S," Seymour won a popularity that was loyal to him for the rest of the day.

Barney Oldfield and Montague Roberts, who took the "S" cautiously, were cheered as they sped out of the curve, but not while they were on it.

But ultimately there came a deep humiliation to the spectators on the "S and L," who had backed their judgment as to the point of greatest danger against that of the people who remained at the right angle by the station.

"We've got a lemon here all right," said an "S and L" watcher, "but let's hope that as they get warmer they'll hit it up."

Watson's Car Turns Turtle.

A marshal darting back along the course on a motor cycle brought the abashing news that those near the railroad station had witnessed the first mishap. Car 22—the Simplex driven by Watson—had turned turtle at the right angle. Two tires had exploded at once and the driver and his machinist had been hurled clear of a car, whose steering wheel had been broken in two.

"Anybody killed?" demanded the "S and L" men greedily.

"No."

The "S and L" men sighed and turned to watch for better things.

Ultimately they had their own little mishap. The Maja, driven by Murphy, Car 10, struck the "S" with a swifter impact than that of its cautious predecessors. A great cheer of thanksgiving went up from the "S and L" men.

"It's the old 'thumb [illegible]

Stretch from Kitchawan to Armonk Was Easy for the Racers.

The course from Kitchawan to Armonk was free from troubles of any character. Between Pines Bridge and Mount Kisco there were four turns, all of a dangerous nature. These were negotiated by the drivers in good style. At certain stretches before the racers reached the Mount Kisco control boundary speed was frequently reached as high as seventy miles an hour, but because of the hilly nature of the country in this vicinity it was impossible to sustain this speed for more than a mile at the most.

At the second turn from Pines Bridge and about a mile from the place, there was a hilly spot in the road, where the cars had to be sent at top speed to surmount it. There was a rise of about ten feet, and the cars struck the top at such a speed that they shot into the air and came down again with a thud. Between Pines Bridge and Mount Kisco the road was so narrow that there was room for only one automobile, and there was no passing of cars.

The control started at a point about two miles before the racers reached Mount Kisco and continued to the far end of the village, a distance of about five miles. When the drivers reached the Mount Kisco control they were met by men on motor cycles, who accompanied them to the other end of the control. The motor cycles were regulated to go twenty miles an hour, the speed allowed by the control, and they set the pace for the racers.

Owing to the scarcity of motor cyclists, many of the drivers were allowed to carry their own time cards to the end of the control. This continued for three laps, when some complaint was made by the Deputy Sheriffs stationed along the control that the twenty-mile rule was being violated. The motor cyclists employed by the Race Committee were told by the Deputies that they must warn the contestants to reduce their speed in the control to the specified times or they would be arrested. It was asserted that several of the drivers were negotiating the distance in from four to five minutes, instead of ten minutes, but why was a mystery, as they were compelled to wait at the end of the control for the expiration of the ten minutes allowed for the control. The difficulty was adjusted just after the third lap, when three additional motor cyclists were added for the control, enabling at least one to be always in waiting.

At Mount Kisco nearly all the business houses were closed. The course as originally planned ran through the centre of the village, but the change materially increased the length of the course and brought the racers through the lower part of the village. The change caused considerable dissatisfaction, and many of the residents sought viewpoints at other stations along the line.

From the end of the control to Armonk, with one exception, the road was in good condition, and in several parts perfectly straight. As soon as the drivers pushed beyond the control they increased their speed, and at times averaged seventy-five miles an hour. On this side of the course, despite its tortuous windings and hilly character, not an accident of any moment was recorded.

Although many thousands of persons witnessed the contest at points situated between Kitchawan and Armonk, the course was so well marshaled that not a hitch occurred.

WIRELESS REPORT OF RACE.

Times Bulletins Told the Story Long Before Other News Services.

By means of the Marconi wireless telegraph system, and through the courtesy of the Lozier Company, which had a wireless station in its headquarters at Briarcliff Manor, on the course, THE TIMES was able to give to the crowds in Times Square yesterday morning a complete account of the incidents of the Briarcliff race within a few minutes after the occurrences were chronicled.

The story as told in THE TIMES wireless bulletins, commenced shortly after 5 o'clock in the morning, when, at 5:08, Sartori, driving the Bianchi car, dashed across the line and was away on his run of practically 256 miles. The story ended after sixty bulletins had been posted, the last announcing the winning of the Isotta car, driven by Strang. The service was so complete that it was not necessary to wait for the extra editions of the afternoon papers to learn about all that had occurred.

All night long wireless telegraph experts had been busy arranging the apparatus and getting in tune with the Lozier station at Briarcliff Manor, with wireless and telephone connections to various other points on the course. First came to THE TIMES station the news of the gathering crowds along the course and of the panting cars preparing to cross the starting line at the signal; then, at exactly 5:00 came the bulletin:

This bulletin was quickly followed by others telling of the successful starting of the other cars, with an announcement that "the last car crossed the starting line at 5:29 o'clock."

Then followed the information that every entrant in the race had started, and the interest was on in earnest. Every few minutes wireless bulletins were flashed through the air and received by the operator in THE TIMES tower, to be quickly transcribed and sent to the bulletin boards on the first floor, where there was watching a large crowd of automobile owners, chauffeurs, and dealers who could not get to the course, besides the public, all of whom were eager for news of the cars.

System Worked Perfectly.

It was interesting to note with what great regularity the wireless system worked and how quickly the news was received after the occurrence of any particular event on the course. It was then quickly reproduced in type form and bulletined for the information of the crowd.

A remarkable circumstance about the reception of the bulletins in THE TIMES tower was the very small amount of disturbance from other stations in the neighborhood. Occasionally, when the tower machine was not in tune with Briarcliff there could be heard distinctly signals from as far South as Cape Henry, Va.; Glace Bay, Sagaponack, L. I.; Manhattan Beach, Wellfleet, and Fire Island. None of these messages could be read, but there was one peculiar occurrence that was not down on the programme.

At the Brooklyn Navy Yard, the school of electricity has been conducting a number of experiments in wireless telephony, and has made somewhat of a success of it. THE TIMES wireless machine got in tune with the telephonic apparatus at the navy yard, and band tunes played on a phonograph could be heard distinctly, while voices were recognized simply as sounds because there was no attachment at THE TIMES station for telephonic use.

These diversions at THE TIMES tower, however, were infrequent, as bulletins on the auto race came in every few minutes telling of the fates of the cars in the various laps throughout the contest and of the accidents that occurred. Comparison with other services from the race showed that THE TIMES news received by the Marconi wireless was from five to ten minutes ahead of both the telegraph and the telephone lines running from the course.

How Wireless News Was Gathered.

One of the interesting features of THE TIMES bulletin service was the gathering of the news to send in by wireless. Along the entire course at intervals of a mile or so there were stationed representatives of THE TIMES, whose sole business it was to gather information for the purpose of satisfying the interest of the crowds in front of the Times Building.

In addition to this the Lozier Company had established through the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company wireless stations at Briarcliff, Pine Bridge, Mount Kisco, Newcastle, Valhalla, and East View. These stations were also connected by telephone with other points, and the news was gathered by officials of the course and employes of the Lozier Company and taken to the nearest station, where it was sent to the Central Station at Briarcliff Manor, there to be sent to THE TIMES and various points around the course.

Owing to the greath length of the course and the rolling country it was only by means of the information gathered by the wireless service that bulletins could be sent from one part of the course to another and to the Times Building, and in this way not alone keep the public informed of what was going on, but made possible the conveying of information to all the cars of the status of the others, in front and behind them, and enabled the officials to keep more or less in touch with all the cars at all stages of the race.

It was considered a remarkable feat that within a minute and a half after the first car started over the line the news was being posted on the bulletin board of THE TIMES and within half a minute after the first car had crossed the line at the completion of the race the news was being flashed into the tower of THE TIMES by means of the wireless apparatus.

30 ARRESTED GOING TO RACE.

One Speeder Stopped by Policeman at the Pistol's Point.

Thirty arrests of chauffeurs and owners of automobiles were made by bicycle and motor cycle police in the Bronx early yesterday morning on the roads leading to the starting point of the automobile race course at Briarcliff. Some well-known people were among those who figured in the arrests.

Magistrate Crane of the Morrisania Court held all who pleaded guilty to speeding in $200 bail for examination.

Of the thirty-odd prisoners arrested, fourteen were taken to the Morrisania Court, all charged with overspeeding. Their names and addresses, as given in court, and the amount of bail they were required to furnish were: Frederick Kelly, chauffeur, Rosslyn, L. I., $100; Francis B. Vanderhose, 40 West Fifty-eighth Street, $100; John Boyn, chauffeur, 220 East Sixty-seventh Street, $100; John H. Lee, 128 West Ninety-sixth Street, $200; Frank C. Herman, Union Hill, N. J., $200; Joseph Nolan, 2078 Broadway, $100; Hugh G. Gillian, 62 West Ninety-eighth Street, $100; Robert Nelson, 220 West 170th Street, $100; August J. Courier, Woodhaven, L. I., $100; Martin Doyle, 207 West Eighty-eighth Street, $100; William Snyder, 321 Columbus Avenue, $100; George Curtis, 235 West Thirty-eighth Street, $500, including a charge of resisting arrest; Edward Sheehan, 160 West Sixty-first Street, and Gus M. Neckshu, 622 Fifth Avenue, $100.

BOY RUN DOWN BY AUTOISTS.

Badly Injured When Struck by Car Returning from Big Race.

Charles Coyne, an eight-year-old boy, who lives with his parents at Williamsdale Avenue and 269th Street, was seriously injured yesterday afternoon, when he was run down by an automobile returning from the Briarcliff races. William Starlet, the driver, saw the Coyne boy and several other children playing in the road and blew his siren, and all of them but the Coyne boy got out of the way.

The automobile struck the little fellow, and, seeing that he was seriously injured, Starlet picked him up and drove at top speed with him to the Fordham Hospital, where the doctors found that he had sustained serious internal and other injuries.

Fine Feathers

A bird in the hat is worth eight or ten in the bush. Is it? In a period of fifteen years prior to 1903, bird life in this country was reduced fifty per cent. But now we are giving them more of a chance; refuges have been established where the birds can breed in safety; wardens have been appointed whom the Federal Government pays the princely sum of One Dollar per month, their real wages being paid by organizations.

YOUTH TRIES TO DIE IN HOTEL ST. REGIS

"Deep Mystery" Back of the Act, Declares His Mother — Was a Stenographer for an Express Company.

Harry G. Foster, a stenographer from Chicago, who left that city about a week ago without telling his home folks where he was going and for what purpose, was found unconscious yesterday morning on the floor of his room in the Hotel St. Regis. He had only 23 cents in cash in his pocket and his hotel bill was unpaid. He was resuscitated and taken to Flower Hospital, a prisoner, charged with attempted suicide.

The police were inclined to think last night that the young man had come to New York to take a long chance on some deal, had lost, and then, with a hotel bill unpaid, had lost his nerve, and had tried to take his life.

Mr. Forster, who is about 28 years old, registered at the St. Regis about a week ago. He was a quiet young fellow. His movements were almost unnoticed. The clerks, however, noticed that he went out of the hotel every day, returning at night. He did not eat at the St. Regis, so that his bill was only for room rent and a few incidental expenses. The hotel management considered that he was a young business man who spent his days down in the Wall Street section.

On Thursday night he went to bed before midnight. Yesterday morning at 11 o'clock a maid went into his room and found him unconscious on the floor. The room was in disorder. Near him was a big bottle which had been emptied of chloroform.

The hotel physician was called in, and later he was joined by an ambulance surgeon from Flower Hospital. The doctors brought young Forster back to consciousness, and then tried to get him to talk. His mouth had been burned so much by the poison that he could have talked but little even if he wanted to. About the only bit of information that was got out of him was that he had taken the poison at 8:45 o'clock yesterday morning.

The ashes made by the burning of some few papers were found in young Forster's room. On the table was a sealed letter addressed to Mrs. A. Forster of 951 Park Avenue, Chicago, and other papers in the young man's clothes indicated that that was his home. Nothing was left unburned or unsealed that would show how or why he had tried to take his life.

His excessive zeal in trying to take his life saved him, for he swallowed such a quantity of chloroform at once that his stomach revolted and he vomited most of the poison. About all he suffered was a temporary stupor and the burning of his tongue and stomach. It was said at the hospital last night that he would be out on the streets within a day or two.

H. Walter Forster of Philadelphia, a brother of the young man, was communicated with yesterday afternoon, and he came over by the first train. He visited his brother at the hospital, saying later that the young man had no good reason to attempt suicide.

H. W. Forster said that his Chicago brother had left that city to take a much-needed rest.

CHICAGO, April 24.—Harry G. Forster of 951 Park Avenue, this city, who attempted suicide to-day in the Hotel St. Regis, New York, has been employed as a stenographer by the Wells-Fargo Express Company for the last four years. Considerable mystery attaches to his visit to New York. He went East a week ago, saying good-bye only to his sister. He took scarcely any money with him, according to his mother, who said to-day:

"I cannot understand why Harry should attempt to take his own life. There is some terrible mystery behind it. He took very little money with him. I do not even know why he went there, and yet they tell me he was living at an expensive hotel. I do not understand it."

Local officials of the Wells-Fargo Express Company said they did not know why Forster went to New York, or who he went with. They added that his position was still open for him. They were able to offer no explanation.

96TH ST. SUBWAY CONTRACT.

Change at That Point Expected to Increase Subway Capacity One-Third.

T. P. Shonts, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, sent a communication to the Public Service Commission yesterday, transmitting the agreement amending Rapid Transit Contract No. 1, to provide for the improvements at Ninety-sixth Street in the Broadway branch of the Subway, as ordered by the commission. Mr. Shonts wrote:

This agreement has now been duly consented to by all sureties on various bonds and is in complete form. We rely upon the exercise by you of your good offices to procure for us monthly estimates of work and to assist in our getting prompt payment from month to month for the work done under this contract.

The changes to be made will, it is believed, increase the capacity of the Subway about one-third.

$3,000 for the Mary Fisher Home.

More than $3,000 was cleared by the café chantant given in the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday afternoon for the Mary Fisher Home. The opening addresses were delivered by Amelia Bingham and Alice Fischer. Others who appeared were R. C. Herz, Victor Moore, May Vokes, John C. Slavin, Yorke and Adams, Jack Northworth, Minnie Dupree, Camille d'Arville, and Templar Saxe.

KISSENA PARK SCANDAL.

Gov. Hughes Takes a Hand and the Whole Case Is Reopened.

The Queens County Grand Jury yesterday passed a resolution to reopen the Kissena Park sale investigation, which has passed through the hands of two previous Grand Juries, and ordered copies of the minutes of the testimony taken at the former investigations turned over to them.

With the ending of the last Grand Jury investigation, which was conducted by Deputy Attorney General Nathan Vidaver, now under indictment in Manhattan charged with extortion, Queens Borough officials, speculators, and lawyers who engineered the deal by which the city paid about $400,000 for eighty-seven acres of swamp land, began to feel easy again, while Joseph Bermel, President of the borough, against whom removal charges were preferred as the outcome of the investigation, made preparations for a trip to Europe.

A committee composed of Major James E. Bell, foreman of the Grand Jury that conducted the first investigation, and Theodore Pettit and Christian E. Andersen, members of the second Grand Jury, went to Albany and made a statement concerning the conduct of the investigations to Gov. Hughes. Yesterday's reopening of the investigation was due to direct orders from the Governor, based on the information lodged with him.

The present Grand Jury's term expires to-day, but a motion will be made before Judge Humphrey in the Queens County Court this morning requesting that the Grand Jury be continued in order to give them an opportunity of carrying out the suggestions received from Albany.

LAKEWOOD GOLF FINALS.

Douglas and Herreshoff May Fight Out Last Round To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 24.—Four well-seasoned golfers will to-morrow struggle for the chief trophy of the Lakewood regular Spring tournament—Findlay Douglas, Frank C. Jennings, William H. Davis, and Fred Herreshoff. Douglas and Herreshoff are the favorites for the final. The results to-day in the first and second match rounds were mixed, the old and new schools winning and losing about equally.

In the afternoon in the first set Davis of Lakewood, the former star, who has not played in a tourney before for seven or eight years, had a medal card of 75, within a stroke of the record, and beat E. L. De Forest of Lakewood 6 up and 4 to go. Herreshoff went out in 42 and beat W. G. Pafeil of the University of Pennsylvania 4 up and 2 to go. Douglas, ex-National and metropolitan champion, made his first six holes in 23, and took the measure of Jasper Lynch, Lakewood by 7 and 6. Frank C. Jennings of Nassau beat Louis A. Hamilton of Englewood 1 up, just as he did J. G. Batterson of Lakewood in the morning. On the first round the other results in that division were E. L. De Forest beat W. E. Conklyn of Wykagyl 2 up, Davis beat P. A. Fogarty of Midland 5 and 3, Pafiel beat S. K. De Forest of Lakewood 4 and 3, Herreshoff beat Howard Whitney of Nassau 2 up, Lynch beat Charles A. Spofford of Garden City 1 up, 19 holes; Douglas beat H. M. Forrest of Philadelphia 2 up, and Hamilton beat J. F. Byers of Pittsburg 2 and 1.

SECOND SET.

First Round—C. V. Meserole, Dyker Meadow, beat J. J. Radel, South Orange, 3 and 1; J. P. Knapp, Garden City, beat Arthur Whitney, Nassau, 1 up; H. W. Brown, Philadelphia, beat J. R. Turner, Wykagyl, 5 and 4; J. A. McCurdy, University of Pennsylvania, beat William Frew, Pittsburg, 4 and 2; M. J. Condon, Wykagyl, beat J. T. Smith, Deal Beach, 4 and 3; J. E. Kelley, Fox Hills, beat E. J. Ridgeway, Lakewood, 1 up, 19 holes; C. L. Tappin, Garden City, won from Robert Weir, Wilmington, by default; W. K. Gillette, Wykagyl, beat D. A. Loring, Jr., Nassau, 4 and 3.

Second Round—Knapp beat Meserole, 5 and 4; McCurdy beat Brown, 1 up, 20 holes; Kelley beat Condon, 3 and 2; Gillette beat Tappin, 4 and 2.

Mutual Reserve Contract Disapproved.

Judge Ward of the United States Circuit Court yesterday withdrew his informal approval of a contract proposed by the receivers of the Mutual Reserve Life to allow the policy holders in that company to assign their claims to the Pittsburg Life and Trust Company. Judge Ward admits that his reconsideration of the matter is due to a memorandum submitted to him by Attorney General Jackson in which the latter said: "It is very clear that no person other than receivers could solicit policy holders of the Mutual Reserve resident in this State to insure with the Pittsburg Company or aid or advise in securing that business for such company."

Atlantic City Lighting Bonds Sold.

The Atlantic City Electric Company, which controls the public lighting business of Atlantic City, has sold $1,000,000 first mortgage refunding 5 per cent. bonds to the banking house of Edward B. Smith & Co. The bonds are guaranteed, principal and interest, by the American Gas and Electric Company, which is controlled by interests affiliated with the General Electric Company. They are part of an authorized issue of $6,000,000, of which $3,750,000 will be reserved for future extensions, and the balance to take up a small amount of underlying bonds.

"The Toreador" for Bowery Mission.

St. Patrick's Cathedral Dramatic Club will give the comic opera, "The Toreador," on Monday evening next, the eve of the centenary of the diocese, at the Grand Central Palace, Forty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, for the benefit of the Bowery Mission of the Holy Name, of which the Rev. L. J. Evers is now the Director. It is expected that Archbishop Farley and Cardinals Logue and Gibbons will attend.

CATCH TWO GRAFTERS IN RECRUITING STAFF

THEN SET VICTIM ADRIFT

Recruiting Station They Sent Him to Existed Only in Imagination—Penalty Two Years in Jail.

Cecil L. Crosson and William F. Whalen, who until a few days ago were attached to the general recruiting service of the army, are locked up in Castle William, on Governors Island, waiting to be transferred to the Federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to serve a sentence of two years for swindling a poor Russian who wanted to be a soldier.

Herman Kramer, who has not been in the United States many years, called at a recruiting station in Philadelphia, and met young Whalen, then dressed in a khaki uniform. Whalen put Kramer through a severe physical examination, and sent him to the general recruiting office, 105 North Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia, and told him that he would meet a soldier at that place who would help him to become a military man. The soldier was young Crosson, who told Kramer to come back the next afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, prepared to go to New York, where he was to be sworn into the service.

Kramer kept the appointment, and Crosson accompanied him to the train. Kramer thought the Government should furnish transportation to New York, but Crosson convinced him he was wrong, and Kramer says he gave Crosson $5 to buy a $2.50 ticket to New York. Just before the train left he says that Crosson asked him for $10 more, but he only had $7.75 left. Crosson took $7.

Crosson gave Kramer a New York address, where he said the work of enlisting him in the army would be finished, but the address was fictitious. He was told to see Col. Heistand at Governors Island. Col. Heistand heard his story, and ordered the arrest of Crosson and Whalen. They were tried by court-martial and convicted.

Kramer was later examined by an army surgeon, and found physically unfit to be a soldier.

RELAY RACE TO CHICAGO.

Boys of Y. M. C. A. to Run Two Miles Each Over 1,000-Mile Course.

Finishing touches have been made to the plans for a relay race of unusual magnitude in which the members of the boys' department of the Young Man's Christian Associations between New York and Chicago will undertake to carry a message from Mayor McClellan and deliver it to Mayor Busse of Chicago in the shortest possible time, and to set a record for the route to be covered.

The distance is approximated at a trifle over 1,000 miles, and according to the present arrangement the race will be started from City Hall at 10 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, July 15, and it is the expectation to deliver the message to Mayor Busse at the City Hall in Chicago on Tuesday, July 21, of the following week. No running will be done on Sunday.

The contestants will be restricted to members of the Y. M. C. A. registered athletes under the age of 18 years. Each man will run about two miles, although in this respect each local association will be a law unto itself.

The race will be under the direct supervision of M. D. Orackel of Cleveland, and associated with him will be A. A. Jameson, Department Secretary of the Twenty-third Street Branch of New York; A. N. Cotton, Secretary of the Buffalo Y. M. C. A., and P. R. Brooke, Secretary of the boys' department of the Toledo Branch. Mr. Jameson will have charge of the race to Buffalo.

Try-outs for the twenty boys to carry the message from City Hall to Yonkers from the Twenty-third Street Branch will begin on Memorial Day, May 30. Each boy will run one mile.

Boston Girls Tennis Winners.

Boston's woman lawn tennis pair, Miss Eleanor Sears and Miss Marion Fenno, carried off the honors in the final of the intercity doubles on the courts of the St. Nicholas Rink yesterday. It was the steadiness of Miss Fenno that won the competition. Her service was severe, and she brought off snappy cross-court shots and smashes at the critical points in a way that caused applause from the fashionable gallery. The opposing pair, Miss Phyllis Green and Miss Dorothy Green of Philadelphia, worked valiantly. They kept things even in the first set up to 6-all, and in the tenth game won after the Boston girls had the lead at 40-love. The points touched deuce four times before they won this game. Then Miss Fenno came to the net and captured the set at 7-5. The second set was scored at 6-4.

The final of the intercity singles was scored with surprising ease by Mrs. Barger-Wallach, Newport. Her driving for placement more than overcame all of the skill which Miss Edna Wildey, New York, could bring against her. There were some splendid and spirited rallies in this match, but the end of each was the same, Miss Wildey being driven far to one side of her court only to be passed on the other with a swift shot. The score was 6-3, 6-1.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT: The PRESIDENT and The MAN

The Times is privileged to present to its readers to-morrow an article the like of which in importance and unique interest has never been published by any newspaper.

This is nothing less than an intimate view of the President of the United States in the White House engaged in the high duties of his office.

While preparing this article, Mr. William Bayard Hale, the writer, spent a number of days at the President's side, studying his methods, manner, and spirit while dealing with affairs of state and giving audience to statesmen and citizens.

Never in the history of the country has a writer enjoyed such an opportunity to observe a President at work—and never has such an opportunity been afforded a writer to form a just estimate of the personality of Theodore Roosevelt, perhaps the most significant figure in the world to-day.

The result is (what it could not help but be) a document of tremendous contemporary interest, and of permanent historical value. The author gives a view of the activities of the White House so vivid that the reader feels as if he were himself in the Presidential presence, touching elbows with Cabinet Ministers, Senators, and famous men, and listening to their conversation.

But in particular, Mr. Hale gives an impression of Theodore Roosevelt which is in effect a new introduction to that extraordinary personality. It is not too much to say that he discovered in the President qualities to which the country at large is an entire stranger. The revelations of this article must be taken into account in all future estimates of the President. No one can pretend to an understanding of Mr. Roosevelt who has not read this absorbing narrative. It will occupy four full pages of to-morrow's issue; no reader of The Times should miss it.

"When he is at a funeral, he acts like the corpse; and when he is at a wedding, everybody takes him for the bride."

We'll not talk ourselves hoarse about them now, but the mid-summer "outing" suits are ready—flannels, crashes, batistes and other tropical fabrics.

You might like to look them over to-day when buying your Spring suit.

"Star" neglige shirts are as good form now as in mid-summer.

In fact, the "Stars" are about the best formed and fitted of all negliges—at any season.

JAMES B. BRADY'S ROCKAWAY STAKES

Farrell's Colt Leads from Start to Finish in Feature Race at Aqueduct Track.

ZIENAP TAKES THE HANDICAP

Black Sheep and Samuel H. Harris Are Long Chance Winners in a Day of Upsets for Favorites.

The chief inducement for popular patronage at the Aqueduct race track yesterday was in the Spring weather's invitation, but that sufficed to draw a big attendance in spite of poor promise of the programme.

The feature event, the Rockaway Stakes, six furlongs, for three-year-olds and upward, lost seven of the eleven horses named to run, and its merit when it came to the contest was confined to the fact that it made exceedingly lively betting, with three of the four runners heavily backed to win. Frank Farrell's James B. Brady and L. A. Cella's Hyperion II. alternated as favorites, and when the call to the post was sounded were equal choices at 7 to 5, with Don Enrique a close third choice, and Fleming the outsider.

The confidence of the Farrell stable and the partisans of that establishment, which included strong delegations of both Tammany and Bowery men, was supreme in spite of the support that Hyperion II. received, and the result of the race was strictly in accordance with the expectations of James B. Brady's backers. The colt, ridden by Musgrave, broke in front, and, going away clear of his field in the first strides, he led from start to finish and won in a big gallop, by two lengths, pulled back to Hyperion II., which was driving after him through the length of the stretch, the outsider, Fleming, filling third place.

In the four races for which the public favorites were beaten, two long-chance horses were returned winners in Samuel H. Harris, which took the opening race, and Black Sheep, which captured the fifth race, both horses starting at 12 to 1.

The summaries:

FOOTBALL MEN MEET.

Officials for Four Big Games Will Be Selected by Contending Elevens.

The selection and payment of games officials was discussed at great length by the managers of the intercollegiate football teams, with Dr. James B. Babbitt, Chairman of the Central Board of Officials, at the Murray Hill Hotel, last night. It was finally decided to allow the Central Board of Officials to continue to appoint officials and to pay the fees excepting the Yale-Princeton, the Yale-Harvard, the Army-Navy, and the Pennsylvania-Michigan games. The referees of these games will be appointed and paid by the contending teams.

The question of fees for coaches was also discussed. It was suggested that they be paid according to the importance of the game. Glen Warner of Carlisle suggested that umpires, field judges, and referees be paid the same fees. Neither question was decided. Another suggestion discussed but not acted upon was that officials be graded and paid according to grade.

Manhattan Reserves Win.

BOWMAN BEST FENCER.

New York Athletic Club Captures National Foil Championship.

Reduced by the preliminaries on Thursday night to a field of five competitors, the final round of the National foil championships was productive of good competitions. McCullagh, Bowman, and Curti of the New York Athletic Club, Fox of the Chicago Fencers' Club, and Breed of the local Fencers' Club were the men left in the final round. Curti, who, after his fine showing in the preliminaries Thursday evening, was thought to have a good chance to capture the championship, experienced a distinct setback in one of his bouts of the final round, when, after an extra bout, he succumbed to Fox of the Chicago Fencers' Club. W. L. Bowman, a clubmate of Curti, subsequently defeated Fox, and later established himself as a candidate for the championship honors when he defeated Curti in the hardest bout of the foils event. The regular period of four minutes was fenced by the men, and at the end the judges were unable to arrive at any decision. An extra bout was ordered, and this passed, like the first, without any decision. At the conclusion of the third bout the match was awarded to Bowman by the judges.

Fox, the Chicago Fencers' Club representative, subsequently fell before Breed of the local organization, giving Bowman the championship without the necessity of fencing with McCullagh in his fourth bout, he having already three victories to his credit. Breed, Curti, and Fox were tied for second place with two victories each, and a round robin with the three as contestants was called. Curti, by defeating both his rivals, took second place, while Breed, although succumbing to Curti, beat Fox and won third prize.

Basket Ball for Firemen's Fund.

Four good basket ball games were witnessed at Savage's Gymnasium at Fifty-ninth Street and Eighth Avenue last night by a large crowd for the benefit of the Firemen's Memorial Fund. The principal game was between picked teams from the Police and Fire Departments of New York City. The game was evidently for blood, and ended in a dispute. It was claimed by their constituents that the fire laddies' team won by a single point, but this was vociferously denied by the guardians of the law. The game, however, was a rough-and-tumble affair.

Two heavyweight professional teams mingled in the first of the three exhibition games. These were the fives of the Seventeenth Separate Company and the Castletons, and although no definite score was kept, the former outplayed their opponents and had a safe lead at the finish. The Wanita team, champions of the Protective League, defeated the Diamonds of Jersey City in one of the other games, 14 points to 8, while the Metropolitans, the lightweight champions of the Protective League, played a tie exhibition game with the team of St. Michael's Lyceum of Brooklyn in the third game.

Manager Stallings Suspended.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, April 24.—George Stallings, manager of the Newark Club, has been suspended by President Powers of the Eastern League for assaulting Umpire Sullivan after yesterday's game between Newark and Buffalo. The trouble arose over decisions on balls and strikes made by Sullivan, which Stallings disputed.

FISK REMOVABLE RIM.

It fits the Fisk Bolted-On Tire.

It is the sanest, safest, simplest lightest, speediest, cheapest device yet offered long-suffering motorists for solving tire troubles on the road.

Any man who has a car neglects his own interests not to go and get a demonstration at 1725 Broadway, N. Y.

A set of these rims, put on the wheels with two extra rims for spare tires, costs from $60 to $75, according to sizes.

The first cost is the total.

Any novice can replace a damaged tire with a new rim and tire in seventy seconds, after being once shown how.

A common wrench—remove five nuts.

That is all.

Gentlemen:

It affords me pleasure and I think it is only right to advise you of the remarkable results obtained from the use of the Truffault-Hartford Shock Absorbers on the Thomas Flyer "America's Champion" in the New York to Paris race, which I drove from New York to Cheyenne, Wyo. In addition to having the right car, I feel that your Shock Absorbers contributed largely to our success in the race so far.

In spite of the fact that we encountered every kind of road imaginable and had to go through snow drifts, slush and water, heavy mud which was sometimes frozen in hard furrows, and over railroad ties for many miles in places where the roads were practically obliterated, we led all of our competitors across the continent and reached Cheyenne on March 9th, 516 miles in advance of the nearest competing car, without breaking or even straining the springs, and the added comfort for the occupants of the car en route was considerable. The car has since reached San Francisco March 24th with a lead of 1206 miles.

Wishing you all kinds of success, I am
Yours truly,

Montague Roberts.

WE SPEED THE PARTING GOLD.

We have now sent, mostly to Paris, about half as much gold as the Bank of France lent to the Bank of England, and before the movement is finished we may send twice as much. Yet there is not a fractional movement in our money market, and the banks continue to gain cash, such is the abundance of our resources. There is nothing to boast of in this, for the United States is the only country in the world where the laws compel gold to be supplied on demand. Other monetary centres may boast of being "free markets"; ours is the only compulsory market. Other markets may mark up the price of their gold, or check its loss in several ways, despite the freedom of their markets, but we must pay without limit while there is a shot in the locker.

This contrast is mentioned for the purpose of recalling in what different circumstances gold last came to us. London scolded us as "unreasonable" for asking it, although we paid for it in equal values, C. O. D. When we asked a little help from Paris the guarantee of our Government was asked, and there was a proposal to insist upon tariff concessions. Afterward, if not on account of the transaction, the reciprocity negotiations were consummated. In both the London and Paris money markets a special rate was quoted for American bills, business being done in them at a higher rate than for natives, or for those people who did not trouble free markets for gold for value received. It was the same when the Bank of France accommodated the Bank of England, the high-sounding phrases in which the business was announced being worthy of the conclusion of a treaty of arbitration. We have our faults, but we do pay our bills.

THE MOTOR CAR RACE.

The Briarcliff races were finished without any serious accident, which is a cause for congratulation. They proved practically nothing except the alertness, skill, and endurance of the drivers. The time made was astonishingly good, considering the quality of the course, but every one of the machines is capable of covering the same distance in much less time over a smooth, safe track, while no sane motorist would think of running one of them as fast as it was run yesterday over the Westchester roads under ordinary circumstances.

As a show the race was prodigiously successful. Many thousands of eager spectators endured the night air, fatigue, and some degree of privation to see both the start and the finish. It was a great race for Italian cars, but we all knew before that the Italians are making first-rate cars. It is doubtful if racing of this kind deserves popularity. Morbid curiosity inspired by the belief that some of the contestants would be maimed or killed probably increased the crowd of spectators. Severe testing of the qualities of motor cars is necessary and desirable, but it can be accomplished in a safer way.

There is no gainsaying the interest of this race as a "sporting event." The daring and skill of the contestants, especially the leaders, were remarkable. But they could do all they did that was worth doing on a well-constructed racing track.

THE CHARTER COMMISSION.

From the wreck caused by the Legislature's fierce spite against the Governor and his measures it is pleasant to note that the bill to continue and extend the work of the Charter Commission was saved. So far as that work was carried last year, it was creditable to the Commission and promising for the city. It is the understanding that it will be completed in the same spirit.

It is announced at the start that the powers of investigation given to the Commission, which are practically unlimited, are not to be used in any sensational manner, or, indeed, with reference to exposing defects and evils of the past so much as to discover real conditions with a view to improvement for the future. That undoubtedly was the temper of the Commission last Winter, and it is a useful one. The new names on the Commission, with the exception of that of Mr. McANENY, the President of the City Club, are not particularly well known, but the Commission was strong before and will doubtless prove stronger. There is a good deal of constructive work to be done, and though the counsels of a group of capable men are by no means sure to be followed, it at least tends to save some errors.

DEAR AND UNNECESSARY.

One of the last acts of the Assembly was to pass Senator AGNEW'S bill "authorizing the Board of Estimate to appropriate $75,000" for the Harbor Pollution Commission. This is a misleading statement of the contents of the bill, as the appropriation is "not to exceed $75,000 in any one year," and the life of the Commission is extended to 1910. The appropriation is therefore really $225,000, and it is to be made in an unusual manner, "by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, without the concurrence or approval of any other Board or public body." Nobody expects bills of this sort to bear their full import on their face, and only those in the know can say why this appropriation should not take the usual course.

The record in this case is interesting. The Commission is the successor of the New York Bay Pollution Commission, and was reorganized a year ago under singular circumstances. The majority was dismissed because it dissented from the minority, and the minority was reappointed with a new majority. The sum of $15,000 was appropriated and $10,000 expended, but the remaining $5,000 was made inaccessible by the Mayor's refusal to act as authorized. At that time the Commission asked for $75,000 and another year's life. It gets $75,000, and it is made payable apparently in each of three years. However, the bill has yet to pass both the Mayor and the Governor, and it may be easier to have it considered on its merits before them than in the hurry and turmoil of the last moments of the session.

Why not admit that the harbor is polluted, and let it go at that? This Commission has already made one report which is tolerably conclusive, not to mention the reports of the State Board of Health in connection with the pollution of the streams of the State, and the very elaborate report of the Merchants' Association. The need of taking three years and spending $225,000 to establish the fact that our harbor is filthy and getting filthier is not apparent. Moreover, the Legislature is doing its best to impede the effort to stop the deterioration of our beautiful streams, authorizing additional sewers to empty into them, and thereby nullifying whatever this Commission might report regarding means of betterment.

THE REAL ROOSEVELT.

Every man in the country with opinions to express and the capacity to express them has given his judgment of Mr. ROOSEVELT. The judgments are about as diverse as the characters of those who give them. The most interesting opinion of all would certainly be Mr. ROOSEVELT'S opinion of himself. The closest possible approximation to that opinion is given in the extraordinary article upon the President which will be published in THE SUNDAY TIMES to-morrow, April 26. This article was prepared as the result of a prolonged personal observation and study of the President, in his office, engaged in the performance of his daily tasks. We are of the opinion that it is the most wonderful portraiture of a public man ever given to the world in the columns of a newspaper.

The readers of the article will see the President as he is. There is no posing, no study to produce effect, no self-consciousness. The subject is seen as by the eye of a hidden or invisible observer. Every line of the picture is drawn with a firm hand. All the values stand clearly forth. The lights and the shadows are there, but there has been no smoothing down to mar and weaken the vivid impression of reality.

It is a great man who is presented to the reader's view, an original man, a remarkably interesting, energetic, dominating personality. The interest, the energy, the dominance are all in the picture, and hold the attention. We can imagine no newspaper publication likely to interest so large a number of the American people, and to interest them so deeply. Readers of THE TIMES who miss this article upon Mr. ROOSEVELT will, indeed, have occasion for regret.

A TEST OF LAND WIRELESS.

The Briarcliff race gave the temporary wireless receiving station on the tower of the Times Building its first practical test, which was remarkably successful in all respects, and foreshadows the general use in the near future of land wireless telegraphy for the distribution of news. The most expert wireless operators have been doubtful of the utility of the wireless over the land for a continuous service. Operation over the sea is much less liable to interference from other currents.

But the service of bulletins to THE TIMES from the improvised sending station at the Briarcliff Hotel was practically continuous for more than five and a half hours. Sixty bulletins were received in that time. The receiving station was "in tune" and ready for messages at 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning. The first car in the race started at 5:08, and the bulletin announcing it was ready for posting at 5:09½. Throughout the morning THE TIMES'S wireless service beat all the other bulletins sent by telephone and ordinary telegraphy by from five to ten minutes.

The last car left the starting point at 5:28, and the bulletin was ready at 5:29. The finish of the race, with the winner's time, was received a half-minute after the event.

About 8:30 o'clock there was some delay caused by interference from the sending station at Manhattan Beach, but this did not last long. There was more or less interference, however, all the time, though nothing to delay the bulletins. Once or twice the receiving operator feared he had not caught the right code signals, but inquiry by telephone proved each time that there had been no mistake.

To the men in the tower the air seemed full of noises. Signals were picked up from Washington, Cape Henry, Fire Island, and Glace Bay. Late in the morning the electrical school in the Brooklyn Navy Yard added the charm of music to the performances. Wireless telephonic experiments were being conducted between two points in the yard, and the senders were using the band records of a phonograph. Once it was necessary to telephone to the manager of a coast station to ask coastwise ships to cease sending messages for a few minutes.

The successful experiment, while proving the efficacy of the land wireless for news service, was useful also as indicating some of the difficulties which must be overcome by improvements in the mechanical equipment of the stations. In course of time the danger of delay by interference will be minimized. The humorists in the wireless service, too, will get tired after a while of their wireless jokes.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Sounded a Bit Hysterical.

If Mr. JEROME isn't sorry by this time for some of the things he said about newspapers at the St. George's dinner he ought to be. A man who has for years received as much newspaper praise, support, and assistance as he has should be able to bear a considerable amount of newspaper criticism, and even something of newspaper injustice and persecution, without becoming so excited about it as to forget that when he says "the press" he speaks, not of an entity, but of a group of entities, no one of which is just like any other and with differences between some of them so wide that their points of resemblance are hardly more than those for which the paper mill and the printing press are responsible.

Had Mr. JEROME all the time the legal mind which he sometimes possesses he would not need to have us tell him while the charges he made might be true as regards one or another newspaper, they must be utterly false as concerns "the newspapers." Indeed, we do not ourselves know of any one crime of which all papers are guilty, and yet Mr. JEROME glibly indicted "the press" for at least a dozen of the very gravest.

As for the power of advertisers to control the news and opinions of newspapers—well, if Mr. JEROME had talked that matter over with the big advertisers before he made his speech several passages in it would have been much changed. Naturally, the advertiser with an argument why this, that, or the other matter of no public importance should be suppressed is heard, like anybody else, and occasionally his request is granted, but, for one instance, when he exercises this "control," people who are not advertisers do it a dozen times—and it's nothing to be ashamed of, either.

When Mr. JEROME tried to be specific as to suppressions of news, he fell into much inaccuracy. Not one of his statements, we believe, was quite true, and several of them were untrue to what ought to be, or might be, common knowledge. Certainly it is false of many, and we think it false of most, newspapers that either the amount or the tone of their criticism of books or plays is determined by the size of the expenditures for advertising made by publishers and managers.

And, however much Mr. JEROME may hate "the newspapers" just now, he has used them rather often, the yellowest not the least readily, and more than once they have had reason to regret having obliged him.

Mr. Astor's Last Mistake.

Acting with the pretty tact for which he is internationally famous, WILLIAM WALDORF ASTOR, in the matter of the Chesapeake's flag, has succeeded in finding and following exactly the course that would bring upon him the greatest amount of criticism in his abandoned country, and the smallest amount of gratitude in the country of his adoption.

It is our opinion, already stated and explained, that the place for the flag of the Chesapeake is in England. A ship of her navy captured it in fair fight—in a fight, by the way, out of which the Americans, though beaten, won one of their proudest memories and most often told legends—and in some British collection of military relics it should remain until time destroys it or men lose their interest in the symbols and reminders of past achievements in arms, which will not be to-morrow or next day. There preserved, Britishers could look at it with pride and Americans without humiliation, since they, too, have won a few victories at sea.

Bought and brought over here, the flag would be an absurdity and an embarrassment for us all, for everybody, especially foreign visitors, would ask how we came by it, and when we replied, "By purchase," the subsequent silence would be voluble indeed. Some would laugh and some would sneer, but whether more at the United States or at Great Britain it would be hard to say, for it is about as bad to sell battle flags as to buy them.

Fortunately, none of our millionaires was misguided enough to attend the auction where that flag was "knocked down," and so we escaped the infliction. But England was not so lucky. Her own rich men, either through instinctive good taste or a disinclination to be sentimental when it costs a lot of money, refused to pay the big price to which the bidding soon rose, and it was left for Mr. ASTOR to secure the physical possession of the flag, which was all that money could give him. Then he made an entirely proper disposition of it by giving it to the United Service Museum. So the right thing was done by the wrong man.

That Mr. ASTOR was the wrong man, the man of all others who shouldn't have done it, everybody will feel at once. He is an Englishman only de jure, and de facto he isn't an American any more. His anomalous position is one he was warranted in taking if he chose, but the country which has naturalized more foreigners than any other has no patience with its own sons when they change their allegiance, and England herself, though welcoming strangers from every land, obstinately looks askance at the American who asks to be something more than a friendly visitor. So she has looked at Mr. ASTOR, according to all accounts, and we doubt much if she values highly the gift from him of one of her own battle flags.

CARDINAL LOGUE DUE TO-DAY.

To be Met Down the Bay by Archbishop Farley—Centennial Plans.

Cardinal Logue, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland, will arrive to-day on th Lucania, to attend the centenary celebration of the archdiocese of New York, which begins to-morrow morning in the Cathedral and will last through the week. The Irish Primate will be met down the bay by Archbishop Farley and a large gathering of priests, who will embark on the steamer Isabelle at Pier A at 6 o'clock this morning.

Cardinal Logue will be driven to the Archbishop's house as soon as he disembarks. He will rest to-day, receiving only intimate personal friends in the Catholic clergy.

The centennial opens to-morrow morning with Thanksgiving masses. At the Cathedral Archbishop Farley will preach at the 11 o'clock mass. Cardinal Logue will celebrate pontifical mass at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, when Cardinal Gibbons will preach.

The celebration will close on Saturday night with a mass meeting of the laity in Carnegie Hall. In all of the parochial schools the children are being trained for their share in the celebration. There will be a special children's mass at the Cathedral on Wednesday, when more than 5,000 children will sing.

DR. CARTER ON A VACATION.

Pastor Will Be Absent a Year in a Search for Health.

The Rev. Dr. William Carter, pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, started yesterday on a year's search for health. Just before he left the city his congregation gave him a purse of $5,000. The church will also fill the pulpit in the pastor's absence with no expense to him.

Dr. Carter, who came prominently into public notice by conducting Sunday meetings at the Belasco Theatre in Lent, will go first to Michigan, where his wife is now at the bedside of her father, who is very ill. He will remain a month in a health resort of that State, and will return to New York the latter part of May to sail for Europe, where he will remain during the Summer and Fall.

The Pulpit Supply Committee has engaged Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth of the Salvation Army to preach next Sunday evening, and among others who will preach in May are Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Prof. Knox of the Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. Francis L. Patton of Princeton.

Rev. B. Q. Denham Agrees to Return.

The Rev. Benjamin Q. Denham, now of Florida, has written the Official Board of the West Fifty-sixth Street Church of the Disciples of Christ that he will accept the call recently extended him by that church. He informed some members of the board previous to his election that he would come if a majority of any considerable size voted to call him. He received about 75 per cent. of the votes cast. He will begin his second pastorate on Sunday, May 3.

THE SEE OF NEW YORK.

Ruled Seventy-six Years by Men from Mount St. Mary's, Maryland.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The following facts and dates will interest many of your readers in connection with the Catholic Centennial in your city. Of the seven Bishops of New York, four hailed from this "Mother of Bishops." Bishop Dubois, the founder, was attached to this college from 1808 to 1826, when he became Bishop of New York. Archbishop Hughes spent seven years here as a pupil and a teacher—that is, from 1819 to 1826. Cardinal McCloskey was twelve years studying and teaching in this house, from 1821 to 1828 and from 1829 to 1834. Archbishop Corrigan came here in 1855 and was graduated in 1859. Bishop Dubois died in 1842, aged 78; Hughes, the next Bishop, died in 1864, aged 67; McCloskey, his successor, died in 1885, aged 75, and Corrigan, who succeeded him, died in 1902, aged 63. So that for seventy-six of its hundred years the See of New York has been ruled by mountaineers.

A Defender of Castro.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We are not at all sure that Castro is altogether wrong, inasmuch as according to law of equity the seeker of aid of the courts must come with "clean hands," while our asphalt friends could use a generous quantity of "sapolio" on theirs to advantage.

If Uncle Sam is to embark in the enterprise of pulling chestnuts from the fires of individuals, why not open an International Collection Agency, for a consideration or commission, instead of going into a heavy expense and risk, with a prospect of getting pain for his trouble? The question is, Would it be prudent, and are we justified to do so?

A fact not to lose sight of is that the highest tribunal of Venezuela is at the back of Castro, and while its verdict may be partial, its ruling must be considered final, and if the highest court of justice of any land is to be repudiated the whole fabric of Government by law will be affected and the doors will be opened to Socialism, Anarchism, and all other bad "isms."

The Point of View.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have had the responsibility of a home, but I have never had to blacken my own stove. It has never caused me serious grief if the wheels of a baby carriage soiled my gown, and I have found willing hands to serve me wherever I have lived. After all, are not difficulties pretty much what we make them? If Miss Lurana W. Sheldon will change her viewpoint she may find people not only ready to blacken her stove but her boots as well.

A SISTER OF LITTLE ONES.

Why Fee the Minister?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A large number of Christian people are taught that marriage is a sacrament. What justification, then, for a personal fee, or tip, to the minister? And even if it is not a sacrament, why a fee; and in what respect does the tip to the minister differ from that to the waiter or barber? I think your views would interest many, and I hope you will give them soon. H. H. BRIGHAM.

The Fountain Pen.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Two reasons may be cited for the term fountan pen, as to which your correspondent expresses surprise and regret. First, that its hollow cylinder is really a font or fount; second, that the way the ink not infrequently leaves the font is decidedly suggestive of fountain activity. J. J. H.

Leaders Among Women.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While THE TIMES is permitting communications for and against baby carriages and their occupants perhaps it will allow the following question. How many of the really creative women, poets, painters, writers, leaders in advanced thought, &c., ever bore children?

The Sign of the Cross.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would the objectors to the use of a cross on our Easter buns consider it a sacrilege for a person, unable to write, to make his "X" mark? Always a cross on my hot buns.

PAPER INQUIRY HITS TRAIL OF J. H. PARKS

He Is in Europe, but Seems to Have Been the Price Fixer of the Wrapping Paper Pool.

ALL DONE IN HIS OFFICE

They Paid Into a Fund Handled by Him and He Arranged for the Maintenance of Prices.

The Federal Grand Jury, almost at the outset of its investigation into the combination which, it is charged, has dominated the wrapping paper trade as to both price and output, has encountered the interesting personality and methods of John H. Parks who, from the testimony at hand, seems to be a good deal of a combination in control of trade, all by himself. Mr. Parks is at present in Europe. How long he intends to stay there the Federal authorities do not know. In his absence the paper manufacturers have been found to be strangely ignorant of the detailed workings of the organization known as the Fibre and Manila Association.

This latest trust investigation was instituted this week after a conference between United States District Attorney Stimson and Attorney General Bonaparte, to whom evidence about the Fibre and Manila Association was referred some time ago. Associated with Mr. Stimson is Assistant United States District Attorney Henry A. Wise, who was through all the Sugar Trust rebating prosecutions and other anti-trust matters.

Parks and Pools No Strangers.

That the investigators should hit the trail of John H. Parks was deemed inevitable by those who have been familiar with the conditions in the paper trade world. So far as the available information goes, Mr. Parks is the centre of action in the Fibre and Manila combination, just as he was in the pool of the boxboard manufacturers formed in 1906, which went to pieces a month or so ago. His name is no unfamiliar one in Wall Street in connection with pools in the wire and steel nail industries and pools in various other lines where manufacturers find it convenient to combine without subjecting themselves to the restrictions of a definite and tangible organization.

With Mr. Burke left out, the Fibre and Manila Association as an organization is nothing more than a group of manufacturers who get together at a hotel once in a while to eat a friendly meal and discuss conditions in their trade.

But with John H. Parks at home and on the job, according to evidence that has been gathered, the situation is quite different. There is, for instance, an Executive Committee of the association, of which Parks is Chairman at $10,000 a year. Wall Street has understood that he is also Chairman of the Executive Committee in many other organizations of a similar nature, to the end that his annual income is measured in six figures. That, however, does not interest the Federal Grand Jury just now. The Executive Committee meets either in Parks's offices, at 1 East Thirty-fourth Street, or else in his apartment in the Waldorf, across the way, and the doings of some of its meetings have become known.

Away back in 1906, for instance, when the Fibre and Manila Association got into business, it was agreed among its members, in the first place, to send to Mr. Parks all lists of customers, prices, and inside trade information. Then the output was allotted between twenty-four mills in the combination, on the basis of a total product, which meant a material restriction of production. Agreements followed regulating the basis on which weights of paper should be determined. Prices were to be maintained, then raised, and raised again, until the total advance reached $12 a ton.

How Trust Plan Was Worked.

Of this advance, $5 a ton, in most cases, was paid into the pool—that is, to John H. Parks. The twenty-four mills received back 70 per cent. of the amount so paid in. In the aggregate, it meant that 30 per cent. of the pool money had been expended where it would do the most good and in accordance with the possibilities of such a pooling arrangement—in the maintenance of the advanced prices. The two dozen affiliated paper manufacturers had net, in addition to such profits as they were making before the twelve-dollar advance, $10.50 a ton additional, without any worry about non-assenting or uninvited mills cutting prices on them.

It is charged that the pool of the paper manufacturers reached out in still other ways; that discriminations in prices were determined upon on shipments west of Minneapolis and north of Omaha; that quotations were denied to certain brokers, and a special class of jobbers was created, to operate on a commission fixed through the pool; that contracts were limited to a three months' period, subject to permission of the Ways and Means Committee; certain exemptions were allowed to members who would agree to a corresponding reduction of profits; fines were imposed upon those who undertook to exceed the productin allowances, and allowances were actually made to mills that shut down in consideration of their remaining closed during the pleasure of the associated manufacturers.

The counsel for the association were instructed to work out a scheme of prolonging its activities without coming into conflict with the Federal Government. There are records of the associated manufacturers showing that meetings were held either in Mr. Parks's office or in the Waldorf-Astoria on Nov. 14, 15, and 16, 1902; Dec. 13, 14, and 15, 1906; Jan. 18, 19, 21, and 22, 1907, and so on through the year. At meetings in May an advance of $3 a ton was ordered, and an additional four-dollar advance in August by the Eastern and Western mills. In November there was a shutdown of one week, under vote of the organization, which was explained publicly in this statement, put out without mention of names, and particularly without mentioning the name of John H. Parks:

At a largely attended meeting of wrapping paper manufacturers it was the opinion of every manufacturer present that on account of the difficulty in getting cash to meet the payroll, due to financial stringency, it was wisdom to shut down paper machines for at least a week. In order to give stability to the market it was also deemed advisable not to increase or decrease prices, but to hold them as at present.

Pool Paid Factories to Shut Down.

Some of the most approved trust methods were followed by this Fibre and Manila Association. Various means were employed to make the independents feel the strength of the pool. In certain instances it is alleged by the pool's critics that factories were closed down entirely under an agreement that the manufacturer would accept from the pool an amount equal to his profits for the period of the shutdown. This amount was a part of the 30 per cent. on $5 a ton that went to pay the expenses of the association.

Under the circumstances the Federal authorities are working at something of a disadvantage with Mr. Parks, who knows so much about pool matters, but is in Europe. They are not informed just when he intends to return, and in the meantime are confronted with the question whether an immunity bath given to some individual would tend to promote the interests of justice.

THE PAPER TARIFF FIGHT.

Publishers to Appeal Before House Committee in Washington To-day.

A committee of more than fifty members was named by President Herman Ridder of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association yesterday at the meeting of that organization in the Waldorf-Astoria to go to Washington to-day to urge the passage of the Stevens bill which provides for the repeal of the tariff on wood pulp used in white paper making. The report of the White Paper Committee was made by John Norris, business manager of THE NEW YORK TIMES, at the morning session. Conde Hamlin made a report upon certain features of the Goebel Libel bill, now pending in the house, and Mr. Norris also discussed the second-class postage question.

There was a further discussion of the white paper situation in the afternoon, and after an election of officers and Directors the convention adjourned.

A telegram inviting testimony was received from Chairman Mann of the Select Committee of the House, appointed by the Speaker to investigate charges that the high price of printing paper is due to a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade fostered and permitted by the tariff. This is the telegram:

The special committee appointed to investigate concerning wood pulp print paper, &c., will be glad to have you or anybody else representing, or in behalf of, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, or The Associated Press, or others interested in the use of paper, testify before it at the earliest opportunity, to the end that if possible the committee may report back to the House before the adjournment of Congress.

The committee especially desires to secure from you facts bearing on the question as to a combination or conspiracy of wood pulp and paper manufacturers or dealers in restraint of trade and relating to the effect of the duty on wood pulp and printing paper on the price of paper and the paper industry. The committee desires to give full and unbiased consideration to the subject at once. The information upon which you have based your statements must be of great value to us. When can you come?

Secretary Baker answered this telegram to the effect that the committee appointed by the publishers would be on hand at the hearing in Washington to-day. Chairman Mann has called a meeting of the special committee for to-day at 2 P. M. at the Capitol. He assigned to each of the members of the committee some special subject of investigation upon which they have been working since their appointment.

Medill McCormick, Chicago Tribune, Chairman; Frank B. Noyes, Chicago Record-Herald; Victor F. Lawson, Chicago News; Jesse E. Long, McKeesport News; Charles A. Rook, Pittsburg Dispatch; Patrick C. Boyle, Oil City Derrick; Elbert H. Baker, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Delavan Smith, Indianapolis News; Hilton U. Brown, Indianapolis News; Edward L. Pretorius, St. Louis Westliche Post; George Thompson, St. Paul Dispatch; Walter J. Driscoll, St. Paul Dispatch; James Bixby, St. Paul Pioneer Press; Charles F. Dodd, Newark Evening News; Frederick Roy Martin, Providence Journal; C. W. Hornick, San Francisco Call; Louis P. Golding, St. Joseph News Press; Otto A. Meyer, Utica Press.

John A. McCarthy, Albany Press-Knickerbocker-Express; E. B. Haines, Paterson News; Wilmot R. Hastings, Lynn Item; James A. M. Butler, Buffalo News; Joseph A. Dear, Jersey City Journal; R. A. Crothers, San Francisco Bulletin; Lafayette Young, Jr., Des Moines Capital; E. Lansing Ray, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; Hal Gaylord and Harvey Fleming, Kansas City Journal; C. H. Rembold, Cincinnati Times-Star; Thomas Rees, Springfield Register; Charles W. Knapp, St. Louis Republic; W. E. Gardner, Syracuse Post-Standard; Frederick N. Dow, Portland (Me.) Express; Frank E. Munsey and Edgar D. Shaw, Washington Times; Charles H. Grasty, Baltimore News; James Elverson, Philadelphia Inquirer; Barclay H. Warburton, Philadelphia Telegraph; John C. Eastman and Lester Jones, Chicago Journal; Erwin Wardman, New York Press; William Berri, Brooklyn Standard-Union; Felix Agnus, Baltimore American; E. B. Stahlman, Nashville Banner; Rudolph Kauffman, Washington Star; E. A. Van Valkenburg, Philadelphia North American; A. D. McKee, Washington Post; John H. Fahey, Boston Traveler; Charles Hopkins Clark, Hartford Courant; William R. Nelson, Kansas City Star; S. A. Perkins, Tacoma News; E. C. Hughes, Seattle Post-Intelligencer; William F. Henry, Duluth Herald; A. H. Peterson, Seattle Times; Addie F. Wright, Haverhill Gazette, and A. S. Crane, Elizabeth Journal.

Herman Ridder of The New York Staats Zeitung was re-elected President. Medill McCormick of The Chicago Tribune, Vice President, and Elbert H. Baker of The Cleveland Plain Dealer, Secretary. W. J. Pattison of The New York Evening Post was elected Treasurer, to succeed Edward P. Call. C. W. Hornick of The San Francisco Call, and Charles H. Taylor, Jr. of The Boston Globe, hold over as Directors, and Charles W. Knapp of The St. Louis Republic, Hilton U. Brown of The Indianapolis News, F. P. Glass of The Montgomery Advertiser, and Conde Hamlin of The New York Tribune were re-elected for two-year terms to succeed themselves.

John B. Townsend of The Philadelphia Press was elected a Director to fill out the unexpired term of one year of S. P. Weston of The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, who resigned.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—John Sharp Williams's petition to the Speaker, asking that one of the bills putting wood pulp on the free list be allowed to come up on the floor of the House is rapidly gaining signatures. Already 121 Democrats have signed, and as soon as the remainder have been lined up an attempt will be made to get the twenty-nine Republican signatures necessary to a majority.

In case the requisite majority put their names to the petition, the Speaker will be confronted with that document along with an excerpt from The Record, showing his opening speech, in which he declared that it was his purpose never to override the expressed will of the majority.

FOR NON-CHURCHGOERS.

Christ Church Plans Sunday Evening Lectures and Discussions.

In place of the regular Sunday evening services at Christ Church, in Thirty-sixth Street, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, beginning next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, a series of lectures will be given in the large assembly hall of the church house. These meetings will be addressed by prominent speakers, and at the close the audience will be free to ask questions or make brief remarks pertinent to the subject under discussion.

The meetings are the outcome of a conference recently held in the Twenty-third Street Young Men's Christian Association to consider the prevailing indifference of the average man to religious services. Practically every Protestant church on the west side below Forty-second Street was represented.

This list of speakers and topics has been arranged:

May 3—The Rev. A. C. McGiffert, Professor Church History Union Seminary, "Jesus' Attitude Toward Social Questions."

May 10—The Rev. George W. Knox, Acting President Union Seminary, "What Is the Use of Faith?"

THE VITALL BENGUIAT SALE.

Mrs. John E. Parsons Buys Several Old Tapestries—Other Purchases.

Many of the same buyers were still getting bargains at the Vitall Benguiat sale at the American Art Galleries yesterday afternoon. Mrs. John E. Parsons and R. J. Collier made many purchases.

Two handsome portieres of red velvet on cloth of gold were among Mrs. Parsons's purchases, and brought $290. For a large Renaissance panel, cloth of gold applique and embroidery, she paid $110; for a fine Sicilian panel in linen drawn work, $70; for two Louis XVI. panels, jardiniere, velvet, garlands, bouquets, and vases in soft colors, $50 each; two forest green brocade Louis XV. curtains, $80; two seventeenth century French vestments, embroidered, $240; green damask embroidered, sixteenth century, Spanish portieres, $190, and for a pair of Genoese jardiniere cut velvet curtains of the Louis XIII. period she paid $220.

A Spanish Gothic coverlet of red velvet went to R. J. Collier for $220. Mr. Collier also paid $130 for a royal brocade curtain, Louis XVI. period; $75 for a Gothic red velvet portière, and $380 for two Spanish cloth of gold curtains.

Edson Bradley paid $110 for a Hispano-Moresque portière of Gothic velvet with gold applique; Wilson Eyre paid $110 for a Flemish tapestry panel; Mrs. E. T. H. Talmage paid $170 for two Italian Renaissance embroidered red brocatelle portières, and C. Parks paid $220 for a Spanish coverlet of cordonet embroidery. Mrs. Henry Clews, A. Lanfear Norrie, and H. D. Ives were other purchasers. The returns for the day were $11,501.50. The sale will be concluded this afternoon.

Tavshanjian Rugs Fetch $81,867.

The Fifth Avenue Art Galleries realized $40,651 at its third day's sale of the Tavshanjian collection of rugs yesterday, making a total of $81,867 for the sale so far. The sale ends to-day. Among the highest prices was $3,700 for an antique Ispahan sixteenth century palace carpet, 19 by 12.8, which went to C. S. Field.

BEVERIDGE PLEADS FOR BATTLESHIPS

Says President's Insistence Shows That Dire Necessity for Armorclads Exists.

PILES URGES TWO FLEETS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—In one of the most eloquent addresses heard in the Senate this session Senator Beveridge to-day pleaded with his fellow-members to grant the prayer of the President for four battleships in the Naval Appropriation bill. He declared that dire necessity for them existed beyond a doubt or the Presidential request would not have been so strongly worded. Despite his efforts, the Senate organization succeeded in having a vote on the question postponed until to-morrow.

Senator Hale opened the debate by making the declaration that the United States Navy had thirty-one battleships and seventeen great cruisers as large as battleships, besides other cruisers, monitors, and gunboats. This strength, he said, was sufficient to equip two fleets, one in the Atlantic and the other in the Pacific Ocean, either of which would be more powerful than the one now making its way up the Pacific Coast.

Senator Piles, who offered the amendment increasing the battleships from two to four, attacked Senator Hale's statement. Of the thirty-one battleships, he said, eleven are obsolete, while six are in sorry condition.

Possibility of War with Japan.

Senator Piles based his contention in favor of four battleships on the possibility of war with Japan, saying that the Japanese were irresistibly drawn to our shores by the advantages secured here. He said that conflict between them and the Americans was liable to arise at any time, and that in such an event the Japanese Government might be forced to wage an aggressive war against the United States even though the Japanese leaders were unfavorable to such a course.

If, he declared, war should come, our Western coast would be found unfortified and unprotected by battleships. Hence he concluded that the time had come not for war, but for such measures as would insure security and peace. There should be two fleets, one for the Pacific and the other for the Atlantic coast.

"If," he said, "we had two fleets we would wage war on no nation and no nation would wage war on us. So I stand for peace in urging four battleships and not for war."

Beveridge Tells Danger of War.

Senator Beveridge advocated the authorization of four battleships, declaring that such a course would favor peace in the future rather than war.

"What information the Executive has in his possession no man knows," declared Mr. Beveridge in referring to the President's message in favor of four battleships. An important fact was that in no other message had the President made such a recommendation on his "solemn responsibility." "Possibly," he added, "if this subject could be discussed in executive session there would be no doubt about the action of the Senate in respect to increasing the number of battleships, the inference being that the situation is so grave that it cannot be openly presented."

LIEUT. AYRES QUITS ARMY.

Son of Col. Ayres, Who Criticised West Point "Overcoat" Order.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The President has accepted the voluntary resignation of Second Lieut. H. Fairfax Ayres of the Second Cavalry, to take effect May 14. No reason is given for his resignation.

Second Lieut. Henry Fairfax Ayres is the only son of Lieut. Col. Charles G. Ayres, who was retired from the army last year on the ground that he was physically unfit to continue in active service. The examination of Col. Ayres by the retiring board was the culmination of a controversy which Mrs. Ayres had with several officers stationed at West Point, principally with Lieut. Col. Robert L. Howze, Commandant of Cadets, and at present Acting Superintendent of the United States Military Academy.

Young Ayres never figured to any great extent in the famous "overcoat incident," which caused his mother to criticise very harshly Col. Howze, the Commandant of Cadets. He was the officer who issued the order that cadets were not to loan their young women friends at football games the overcoats that the Government provided for them. Miss Emily Ayres, a sister of Lieut. Ayres, was one of the young women who was wearing a cadet coat when the order was issued.

Returning from the Philippines soon after the overcoat storm broke, Col. Ayres gave out public interviews upholding the stand taken by his wife and criticising many of his brother officers. The upshot of it all was that Secretary Taft issued an order that Mrs. Ayres must not visit the West Point reservation without permission of those in authority.

Then Col. Ayres was sent before the retiring board and retired from the service. It has been understood in the army for several weeks that young Ayres was to resign from the army.

LAUGH AT LILLEY'S ANSWERS.

Committee May Recommend Action Against Representative.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Representative George L. Lilley again was a witness before the House Special Investigating Committee to-day. Many of the questions asked by the committee were of an editorial nature showing clearly the committee's conviction that Mr. Lilley's evidence was lacking in consistency. When Mr. Lilley's expected answer of "I don't exactly recall"

MRS. FLAGG TO WED JOHN T. ATTERBURY

Both Have Grown Daughters and the Families Have Long Been Intimate.

DATE NOT YET ANNOUNCED

The Marriage Will Take Place Soon, However, and Without Display, as Mrs. Flagg Is in Mourning.

An engagement of more than usual interest to society which has just been announced to their intimate friends is that of Mrs. Anna Davis Robbins Flagg, widow of W. Allston Flagg, to John Turner Atterbury. The wedding is to take place within a very short time, and without display, as Mrs. Flagg is in deep mourning for her mother. None but the children of the two principals will witness the ceremony.

Mrs. Flagg is one of the most attractive of the younger widows in society. Her daughter, Miss Josephine Flagg, was married last Spring to Philip Boyer of Philadelphia just after she had made her début. She has two other children, Miss Beatrice Flagg, who is not out, and a young son. She has been a widow several years and has been in mourning some time, as she had hardly put off mourning for Mr. Flagg when her father, Thomas Robbins, died, and about a year ago her mother died.

Mr. Atterbury is a member of the old Atterbury family, a brother of Robert Kennie Atterbury and Charles L. Atterbury, and a cousin of the Rev. Anson P. Atterbury. Lewis Atterbury, who died last year, was also a brother. He is a member of the Metropolitan, Groller, The Players, New York Yacht, and other clubs and of the Sons of the Revolution.

His first wife was a Miss Jones of Virginia, who died seven or eight years ago. He has four daughters, two of whom are Mrs. Eliphalet Nott Potter and Mrs. J. W. Fuller Potter, the sisters marrying brothers.

The third daughter, Miss Ellen Mercer Atterbury, is to be married to Dudley Rogers Howe this Summer.

The fourth and youngest daughter, who came out a year or two ago, is Miss Katharine S. Atterbury.

The Misses Atterbury have been the most intimate friends of the Misses Flagg, and the families are well pleased with the engagement.

Mrs. Flagg has a town house, 37 West Forty-seventh Street, and a country home, Sunnyside Farm, at Mount Kisco. Mr. Atterbury has a Summer home at Islesboro, Me., and his town house is 13 West Forty-ninth Street.

The couple plan spending part of the Summer season at Mount Kisco and part at Islesboro, where the wedding of Mr. Atterbury's daughter will take place.

PLAN A MILITARY WEDDING.

Lieut. Robert E. Wood, U. S. A., and Miss Mary B. Hardwick, daughter of Mrs. George W. Hardwick of Augusta, Ga., and a sister of Mrs. Ernest M. Stires, wife of the rector of St. Thomas's Church, who are to be married in St. Thomas's at 4 o'clock on Thursday, April 30, have completed their wedding plans.

It will be a military wedding and all invited to be ushers are officers in the United States Army. Paul Moore of Kansas City will be best man, and the ushers are to be Lieut. Frank P. Lahn, Lieut. Robert F. Jackson, Lieut. Frank O. Whitlock, and Capt. Edward M. Adams of the army. Mrs. Ernest M. Stires will be her sister's only attendant.

The immediate members of the two families only will be invited to St. Thomas's rectory after the ceremony for an informal reception.

Miss Hardwick is a sister also of Mrs. Cordray, wife of Capt. David P. Cordray of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, U. S. A., who is now stationed in Manila.

JUNIORS' EASTER DANCE.

The Easter dance of the Friday Evening Junior Assemblies, which was the final event of the series, was held last night in the small ballroom at Sherry's. Those receiving were Mrs. James R. Hayden, Mrs. Robert Roosevelt, and Mrs. Henry E. Coe.

Griswold A. Thompson led the cotillion, and among the figures introduced were the Maypole dance and the kneeling figure, in which the girls held wands, kneeling, while the men showered the women with Spring flowers.

A supper was served at midnight, and afterward there was informal dancing, the entertainment concluding with the Virginia reel. The favors were lilies, fancy bags, ribbons, and pin cushions for the girls, and boutonnières, college flags, and silver souvenirs for the men.

Among those present were the Misses Ruth Adams, Joanna Auchincloss, Edith Brooks, Nellie G. Brown, Georgianna Barber, Angelica Brown, Elizabeth Bacon, Louise Baldwin, Dell Carrere, Elizabeth Claflin, Estelle Crosby, Rosalie Coe, Nathalie Duveen, Elizabeth Fowler, Marjorie Gould, Love Godwin, Geraldine Gray, Charlotte Glover, Annie Goddard, Dorothy Hayden, Katharine Hamersley, Theresa Ingersoll, Dolly Madison La Montagne, Katharine Motley, Vera Onativia, Emily Potter, Mildred Poore, Gladys Robbins, Olga Roosevelt, Charlotte Thorne, and Maud Shepherd; also, Frederick Bourne, Bache Hamilton Brown, Gerald Bramwell, William C. Bowers, 2d, David Barrows, Clement Barnwell, Evans R. Dick, Carroll C. Carstairs, William Drayton, David J. Ely, De Courcey Fales, Evans S. Fox, James M. Forrest, Edwin Fairfax, the Messrs. Gould, Stephen Galatti, Thomas Harris, E. Kenneth Hoyt, Chichester C. Kerr, Morgan La Montagne, Wadsworth Lewis, Robert D. Marshall, George Miller, John T. Terry, 3d, Louis W. Noel, H. Osborne, and W. E. Shepherd.

SCHOOLGIRLS ON THE STAGE.

Present "La Belle Chausseuse" for Charity Before a Large Audience.

A large and interested audience was at the Berkeley Lyceum Theatre yesterday afternoon to see the first performance of "La Belle Chasseuse," the operetta by Miss Grace Hollingsworth and the Misses Grace Henry and Katharine W. Tweed, which was played by amateurs for the benefit of crippled children. There was a second performance last evening, and the third will be given to-night.

The class of crippled children for whom the operetta was given, together with their teachers, was on hand, and all were enthusiastic over the entertainment. The alumnae of the Spence School was also out in force, as the actresses and the composers are all students or graduates of that institution.

Miss Christine Roosevelt occupied the box office, and disposed of tickets. The ushers were the Misses Tweed, Romeyn, Ashmore, Lyon, Hollingsworth, Poor, Blackwell, Alexander, and Bertron, and Mrs. Harry T. Ashmore and Mrs. David Taylor.

There was a chorus of thirty girls. Miss Lucy Margaret Roosevelt was the prompter, and Miss Anne Crane the stage manager. The numbers making special hits were the duet, "Love in a Birch Canoe," by the Misses Pratt and Bushnell; the topical song, "Why," by Miss Bushnell; the nymph dance by the Misses Harbeck, and a lively hunting song by Miss Hitchcock, who afterward with Miss Kelley did a graceful dance. The latter also sang a catchy song called "If I Were Only a Lady Millionairess."

The second act opened with an Angelus chorus, and among the pretty songs were "The Land of Candle Flame," sung by Mrs. G. H. Miller; "For Love of a Star," by Miss Pratt, and "If I Were the Mistress of Modern Affairs," by Miss Henry. Miss Henry Designed the effective costumes, and R. O. Jenkins staged the operetta.

Several hundred dollars was cleared at yesterday's performances, and to-night's promises to be equally successful.

CHARITY BRIDGE AT PLAZA.

$800 Realized for the Benefit of the Poor Whites of the South.

Three hundred and eighty-four women played bridge in the ballroom of the Plaza Hotel yesterday afternoon for the benefit of a woman's auxiliary of the Southern Industrial Association. There were ninety-six tables. The bridge was arranged by Mrs. Algernon S. Sullivan, Mrs. Spencer Aldrich, Miss Mary Vanderpoel, and others, who are interested in the charitable work in aid of the poor whites of the South. About $800 was realized.

Mrs. Winfield Scott made top score. There were prizes for each table, and the winners received silver prizes given by various Fifth Avenue shops. All the prizes were given either by the organizers of the bridge or the tradesmen.

PRINCETON BOYS IN A PLAY.

Will Appear To-day as Revolutionary Dames and Gay Chorus Girls.

The Triangle Club of Princeton University will present at two performances to-day at the Waldorf-Astoria their annual production, which this year is a topical, musical, and whimsical comedy based on history and called "When Congress Went to Princeton."

The students who will wear the costume of Revolutionary women are Brown Roslton, Roy Dustine, and W. P. Whilocke, Jr. There is also an octet of students who will be chorus girls. Other principals will be N. L. Whitman, D. H. M. Pyle, F. L. Cunningham, and J. P. Myers. The first scene of the comedy is laid in the taproom of an inn and the second on the university campus.

TRAVEL TO EUROPE PICKS UP.

1,850 Outward Bound This Week—To-day's Ocean Travelers.

There has been a slight improvement in outgoing first cabin steamship traffic in the week just ending, and steamship men are now taking a more hopeful view of the situation. They still believe that the outward travel will fall behind that of last year, but they also believe that the percentage will not be as great as was first estimated.

It is from the West and Middle West that a majority of the present bookings are coming. Since Monday the following are the numbers of first cabin passengers sailing on the big liners: Kronprinz Wilhelm, 125; Mauretania, 271; Adriatic, 319; Cedric, 178; Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, 400; Touraine, 80. With to-day's sailings the number for the week will be about 1,850.

The liners sailing to-day show an increase in booking. The American liner St. Louis, sailing for Southampton, will have on board:

Henry Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Bart J. Barry, the Misses Kate and Helen Brice, Gen. McCoskry Butt, Byron Chandler, Sumner R. Hollander, Mme. Leffer-Burckhard, Mrs. H. E. Howland, Miss Elizabeth Marbury, Mrs. Winthrop McKinn, Mrs. S. E. Murphy, Mrs. Jesse Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. Ricardo Stracciari, Carl Burrian, Mrs. George Tyler, William Todd de Van, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Walker, and Miss Dorothy Williams.

The Hamburg-American liner President Lincoln, outgoing for Hamburg, will carry:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Adams, F. A. Buttrick, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Britton, Rudolph Boerlin, Mrs. J. W. S. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Greer, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hart, Mrs. S. A. Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Low, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Proctor, Mrs. W. Stone Smith, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Tower, Dr. and Mrs. A. E. Traylor, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Trumbull, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Williams, and Martin Keppler.

The Minnehaha of the Atlantic Transport Line is leaving for London with every cabin full. Among those going on her are:

Guy Ambrose, Mrs. R. Snowden Andrews, Mrs. George Field Barton, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Beveridge, Dr. W. M. Choate, Arthur Lawrence, Dr. and Mrs. J. H. McCready, the Rev. and Mrs. Thomas E. Green, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Mallory, Mrs. L. McKim Murdock, Mrs. Robert A. Neely, Dr. and Mrs. Charles C. Phillips, Mrs. Clarence Romaine, Mrs. H. C. Potter, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Smith.

Mrs. S. D. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ball, Mrs. James Delano, N. P. de Saussure, Dr. and Mrs. Carroll Dunham, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Hall, Miss Gertrude L. Hoyt, Louis Levy, Miss Marion Lindsay, Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Morgan, George Cole Scott, Robinson Tyndale, Cornelius W. Van der Hoogt, Miss Gertrude Van Pelt, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Stewart Wurts.

Sailing on the Anchor liner Caledonia for Glasgow are:

Mrs. William Addison, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Cuthbert, Mr. and Mrs. G. D. C. Ellis, Mrs. Edwin F. Earl, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Fielding, Mr. and Mrs. James Lawther, the Rev. Lindsay Parker, Mrs. C. W. Preston, and Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ronald.

Outgoing voyagers on the Cunarder Etruria include F. G. Garratt, M. E. Giradot, George Jacobs, Henry Kidd, and Mrs. W. G. Wilson.

American Hostess for Royalty.

COPENHAGEN, April 24.—Count Raben-Levetzau, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his wife, who was a daughter of Charles Moulton of Albany, N. Y., gave a dinner to-night to King Edward and Queen Alexandra and King Frederick and Queen Louise, and which was attended by all the members of the Danish royal family and thirty other prominent personages.

Social Notes.

Anson W. Hard, Jr., who is to marry Miss Florence Bourne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Bourne, on April 29, will give his bachelor dinner to-night at the University Club.

The Signal Division, First Battalion, Naval Militia, of New York, will give a dance to-night on board the United States ship Granite State, at the foot of West Ninety-seventh Street.

The last of the Metropolitan Dances will take place to-night at Sherry's.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Janney of Philadelphia, who recently returned from Europe, and Mrs. William Gammell of Providence are at the St. Regis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Arnold of South Orange, N. J., and Howard S. Kerner and Samuel J. Smyth of Great Barrington, Mass., are at the Buckingham.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane are booked to sail to-day for Europe.

Winston Churchill, the novelist, and Mrs. Churchill, who have been staying at the Plaza, went to their home, at Windsor, Vt., yesterday.

A May Blossom sale will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria this afternoon. The proceeds will be used to aid in the founding of a hospital for old and disabled railroad men.

At the annual love feast of the Brotherly Love Society there was a musical and literary prize contest, in which the first prize for the best original poem was awarded to Miss Clara M. Thomas, the second to Miss Louise Birnie. Miss Josephine A. Rohrs won first prize for the best song, and Miss Amelia Herter the second prize.

ANSWERS HER CRITICS IN THEATRE CLUB

PAYS RESPECTS TO A PLAY

She Rejected It When Author Called It "a Dig at Clubwomen"—Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld Not There.

The Century Theatre Club, which has been going its way with apparent serenity since Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld objected to the presence of Mark Twain in the club's booth at the Actors' Funr fair last May because he had written a book attacking Christian Science, had its annual reception yesterday. In anticipation of a row, Mrs. Beatrice Hart, the President, came to the meeting in the Hotel Astor accompanied by her husband. Mrs. Rosenfeld has held aloof from the club's meetings for a year.

Sympathizers of Mrs. Rosenfeld have been active in baiting the present administration, and one club member is said to have inspired an article printed in an afternoon paper, which accused the President of being a cat's-paw for a powerful member—Mrs. Edith Ellis Baker. There were also allegations concerning racial prejudice among the officers and certain adherents of the club. Just as Miss Mary Hathway Baldwin was singing an aria from "Les Huguenots" a copy of the paper was handed to Mrs. Baker.

Mrs. Baker, who is a successful dramatist, has really been holding aloof from the bickerings of the club. She seemed aghast at the thought that she was capable of being tyrannical. She would not speak for publication, but she admitted the accusation hurt her. The official statement must come from Mrs. Beatrice Hart.

Then Mrs. Hart was compelled to step down from her chair and clear up the tangle. Mrs. Hart was ready for anything, with her stalwart young husband by her side and a costume which she knew would defy criticism and inspire respect of her enemies. This was a black satin gown, trimmed with yellow disks. She wore a hat trimmed with blue flowers, and canary-colored gloves of the 14-button variety.

Measuring her words, Mrs. Hart told of the circumstances which have plunged the club into secret rebellion.

"I am the President of the Century Theatre Club," she said, "not only nominally, but actually, and Mrs. Baker has nothing whatever to do with the official affairs. It is cruel to accuse her of interfering. Of course she is a brilliant woman, but she occupies no different position from any other woman. It is untrue to suggest that there is any racial prejudice in the club. How could there be? I am a student of comparative religions. In fact, I am more of a student than a clubwoman."

Mrs. Hart then enumerated some of the societies for theosophical research with which she had been identified.

"I don't know who has circulated these injurious rumors," she continued, "but in my capacity of President I shall try to find out. I cannot say whom I suspect because I deal with facts, not imaginative notions."

Some one suggested Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld, whereupon Mrs. Hart acquired great dignity, and said airily:

"Mrs. Rosenfeld doesn't come to the club any more. Why? I cannot say. At the time of last year's election I was ill. I did not seek the Presidency, I was what they call a 'black horse.'"

"A 'black horse?'" queried one of the inquisitors.

Mrs. Hart tried to explain that "black horse" was a racing term to denote an unexpected winner.

"Don't you mean the white horses of Rosmersholm?" suggested one of the Ibsen enthusiasts.

Mrs. Hart bristled with anger, and retorted: "I cannot bother with such trifles. I will say this, however: There has been a disturbance in the club, but not occasioned by any racial prejudice. A year ago André Tridon, the playwright, was selected to provide some plays for us to-day. At first he was going to have some Shaw plays, but they were impossible to use. Then he said he would put on one of his own plays, but he neglected to file the manuscript with me, according to our Constitution. I asked him for the copy of his play, and I was aghast when I saw it. It was entitled 'A Dig at Clubwomen!'

"It would have been offensive to many members, so I asked him to give us another play. Here the discussion ended, because Mr. Tridon is now producing 'Their Daughter,' which is quite delightful. 'The Dig at Clubwomen' is all very well for vaudeville, but not for us."

Mrs. Hart advised the members to think no more of the unfortunate tempest in a teacup.

There will be an election of Directors for the club on Friday, May 8.

HEARING ON SUNDAY SHOWS.

Court Reserves Decision on Moving Picture Performances.

Test cases on the question of the law relating to performances in theatres on Sundays were argued in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday. The cases included the Keith & Proctor Amusement Company, Archie I. Shepard, for the Manhattan Theatre Company, and the Eden Musée American Company. The other cases are the Olympic Athletic Club, a moving-picture place in Stanton Street, and a dancing room in East Fifty-eighth Street.

The actions are on appeal in each case from an order in the Supreme Court continuing temporary injunctions preventing interference by the police.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Connoly, for the Police Commissioner, argued that the Fifth Avenue Theatre of Keith & Proctor had violated the law by showing moving pictures of the Passion Play, which was billed as a lecture on the life of Christ.

The other cases were somewhat similar. The Olympic Athletic Club objected to the police stopping business in its roller skating rink on Sundays. Decision was reserved in each case.

NEW THEATRE FOR BOSTON.

C. H. Bond Has Plans for House to Present High-Class Attractions.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 24.—Announcement was made to-night that C. H. Bond, the capitalist, will erect a theatre on Tremont Street, near the Hollis Street Theatre, and that it will be one of the most finely appointed playhouses in the city.

It is intended to produce a high order of plays. When Mr. Bond was asked how he could be assured of this, his reply was that arrangements had already been made whereby the new theatre, which is to be called the Lyric, will present a full line of standard attractions.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

F. Ziegfeld, Jr., signed a contract yesterday with Charles A. Bigelow, the comedian, in which the latter agreed to appear in Mr. Ziegfeld's productions for the next three years. He will appear with Anna Held in a new musical comedy to be produced at the New York Theatre in October.

"The Merry-Go-Round" will have its first production to-night at the Circle Theatre under the management of Felix Isman.

Contracts have been signed by the estate of Henry C. Miner and Campbell B. Casad for Mr. Casad to write two burlesques for the "Western Wheel."

Victor Herbert and his band will appear at the Friars' Festival at the New York Theatre on May 14.

Edith Tarrington will sing the prima donna role in "A Knight for a Day" at Wallack's, beginning on Monday. Alice Fisher, who has sung this role, will end her engagement with the company to-night.

Signor Paderewski was the host at a box party at the Herald Square Theatre last night.

CONCERT TO AID JEWISH POOR

Attractive Programme Arranged for To-morrow Night—$25,000 Needed.

The concert to be given on Sunday night at the Metropolitan Opera House for the benefit of the United Hebrew Charities has been arranged in order to help raise the $25,000 necessary to take care of the Jewish poor during the coming year. Of the $70,000 needed $45,000 has already been raised.

At the concert Sunday Mmes. Gadski, Mukle, Liebling, and Maud Powell, and Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, pianist, will appear. Miss Mabel Taliaferro and her company will give a scene from "Polly of the Circus."

Bernard Naumburg, Chairman of the committee organizing the collection of funds, said yesterday:

"The United Hebrew Charities Association is experiencing the greatest difficulty in providing for the numerous applicants for help. It is pitiable to observe men who are skilled workers appealing for assistance which cannot be rendered. These hard times have affected the better class of artisans and our institution wishes to help them tide over their present troubles."

Seats for the concert may be obtained at the Metropolitan Opera House, at hotel ticket offices, from M. E. Appelbaum, 2 Rector Street, and at Tyson's, McBride's, and Rullman's theatre agencies.

BARNARD GIRLS IN A PLAY.

They Give "The Taming of the Shrew," with Dancing After the Performance.

"The Taming of the Shrew" is the play that the Undergraduate Association of Barnard College is giving this year. The first two performances took place yesterday; there are to be two more to-day. This is the cast:

Baptista	H. Fox
Vincentio	O. Rilke
Lucentio	J. Goldberg

All of the parts were adequately filled, the entire cast having been well coached. The Columbia Philharmonic Society provided the music, and after the evening performance there was dancing.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Mrs. Seth Low, Miss Clara B. Spence, Mrs. John A. Wyeth, Mrs. Alfred Meyer, and her Excellency Kang Mue Wah.

Prize Contest for Song Writers.

Augustus Edwards, the music publisher, is to start a song writers' contest, beginning on May 1 and ending on June 1. A committee will select the six best songs submitted, and $500 in prizes will be distributed, the largest prize, to the winner, being $225. Mr. Edwards reserves the exclusive right to publish all the accepted songs, and says he will pay the prize winners royalties on each copy sold.

Wants to Give Opera in the Park.

Director Ivan Abramson, of the Italian Grand Opera Company has made application to the Commissioner of Parks, Henry Smith, for permission to give opera on Sunday afternoons in Central Park after May 1. He has offered to defray all expenses in connection with the erection of a platform and stage on the lawn.

Walter D. Munson.

Walter D. Munson, President of the Munson Steamship Line, died suddenly yesterday at his home in Brooklyn. Heart disease was the cause of death. In addition to the Munson Steamship Line Mr. Munson was interested in the Atlantic and Mexican Steamship Company, of which he was Vice President and a Director, and in the International Coal Company, of which he was Secretary, Treasurer, and a Director.

'VARSITY STUDENTS IN 'CAP'N KIDD & CO'

Not a Striker Dodged the Chorus and the Array of "Girls" Was Fine.

SOME CATCHY SONGS, TOO

As to the Comic Opera, It Revolves About an Hour Glass That Keeps Pirates Young.

"Cap'n Kidd & Co." is the name of the new original "comic opera in two acts" which the 'Varsity Dramatic Club of New York University presented for the first time last night at the Carnegie Lyceum to an admiring audience of friends, mothers, and sweethearts.

"Cap'n Kidd" scored a hit, excelling anything ever done before by the club. The libretto by William Le Baron, though of the punning variety, was so very good that many passages were quite up to the average professional standard. The music by Deems Taylor kept things moving from first to last.

There was one "girl," a brunette, in the chorus, so pretty that she must have been embarrassed by the number of opera glasses turned upon her. "She" certainly would have been flattered could she have heard the remarks of the real girls in the audience.

This musical comedy has the unusual advantage of possessing a distinct plot. Cap'n Kid and his crew, all supposed to have died 200 years ago, are really still alive on an island where they have been stranded. The only hour glass on the island is a "twenty-four-hour glass," and the pirates, believing the glass to be truthful, have remained youthful by the sheer force of thought.

A young New Yorker comes along in his steam yacht, sailing into the pirate harbor, to the extreme consternation of Mrs. Kidd, who is anxious that the Captain shall remain permanently on shore and give up his buccaneering habits. When the pirates finally capture the ship they can't run it, because they don't know anything about steam yachts or any such new-fangled ideas. As they are about to make the young New Yorker, who has a very light-hearted way of accepting all misfortunes, walk the plank, he raises the "twenty-four-hour glass" as if to break it. Right there the play ends. If he breaks the glass then the pirates must all grow old and die in a twinkling.

The individual success of the evening was made by J. J. Scannell as Jack Morton, the New Yorker, who explained that piracy had improved during the past two hundred years, and was now practised on all sides, especially in Wall Street. The one song, sung by this young comedian, really brought down the house. It was that entitled "Take a Chance." When, referring to the recent trouble about hazing at the university, he sang:

"Though professors, from their levels,
Always frown on college revels,
Still they're harmless little devils—
Take a chance"

Cap'n Kidd himself was impersonated by P. C. Wolff. Among the other performers were H. J. Friedberg, W. F. A. Brown, J. Wheeler, Jr., A. P. Payson, J. A. Shiras, T. M. St. John, W. P. Sinclair, H. Thedford, and H. Fitzpatrick, who gave a capital character bit as an old professor.

THE PENNSYLVANIA ISSUE

Oversubscription of New Bonds a Factor in Stocks—Banks Gain Cash.

It became apparent yesterday that the Pennsylvania bond offering is to be many times oversubscribed, and on the stock market this prospect exerted strong influence from the opening to the close of business. To it was due the strength of prices and the breadth of the trading which, in point of volume, ran to nearly 1,000,000 shares. Curiously enough the suspension of one of the most important Stock Exchange houses in Wall Street also had the effect of stimulating prices. This house had all through the depression of 1907 held steadily to a position on the bear side of the market and presumably reaped great profits. It persisted in this attitude, however, after the market steadied from the shocks of the Autumn money disturbances and through the recent advances. In addition to this it is understood to have been operating for the rise in cotton, and cotton prices have been going down steadily. Its position has been growing more precarious through each day of advancing stock markets and falling cotton markets, and yesterday morning it found itself unable to meet its immediate obligations. Although nothing definite can be known about such a matter, opinion on the Stock Exchange was that this house was short of not less than 75,000 shares of stocks. Certainly the buying in of stocks for it under the rule yesterday was on a scale warranting such an estimate, and naturally such striking purchases did much to sustain the general rise in prices. The embarrassment of this concern also had the further effect of shaking the confidence of bearish operators generally and led to heavy covering in all sections of the list. A fall in wheat prices was accompanied by the news from Washington that Secretary of Agriculture Wilson had announced it as his belief that the farms this year will produce bumper crops.

Preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week indicate a gain of some $5,000,000 cash by the banks in spite of a loss to the Sub-Treasury through takings of gold for export. To the Sub-Treasury direct the banks have lost on balance $1,804,000, but the gain from the interior has so much more than offset this as to produce the final gain mentioned. There were no changes of importance in money rates, and the foreign exchange market was quiet and without news of further gold engagements. Offerings of securities prompted by the success of the Pennsylvania issue continue to crop out, among those announced yesterday being $7,000,000 of Boston & Albany 4 per cent. bonds and large blocks of public service issues.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 24.—Local copper shares were more active to-day and fractional advances were the rule throughout the list. Calumet & Arizona, Copper Range, and Old Dominion each gained a point, and the miscellaneous list was active and higher under the lead of American Agricultural Chemical. The close was strong and with about the highest prices of the day.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

No Halt in the Advance.

Extravagant predictions of further advances in the market were the rule yesterday, and few were more eager to express their enthusiasm than the belated bears who have fallen in with the swing of the market in the last two or three days. The Pennsylvania bond sale continues to be the prime argument of those bullishly inclined, but apparently there is a disposition to concede that the speculative machinery is being worked hard in the marking up of prices and the making of a bull market. The bull markets which have not been started by manipulation are few, but in the present case the manipulators have a substantial explanation ready in the probable satisfying of the financial needs of the big corporation. Merely taken on its own account, the Pennsylvania incident would not be a market factor, but its significance from the point of view of other roads is pointed to and thoroughly emphasized. Cynical observers of the market yesterday remarked that any stock which shows persistent strength and continues to advance arouses the suspicion that a bond issue is impending. That of course applies to many of the strong stocks just now.

Ignoring the Failure.

Ordinarily a failure of the importance of the McIntyre suspension would have produced at least considerable irregularity in the market, but in this case it did not suffice to restrain the advance. Presumably the explanation is that the firm's actual commitments in the market at the time of the suspension were small, and if its tendency had been bearish the covering of these contracts would have been a stimulant instead of anything else. One feature of the suspension which was commented upon was the output of rumors involving other houses and individuals more directly concerned with the commodity markets than with the Stock Exchange. Some were obviously imaginative, and in the case of some prominent individuals absolutely absurd. Nevertheless they found a ready circulation, and perhaps as usual did some injury. So far as the stock market is concerned, it is a question according to brokers, whether after all suspensions of this sort will not in time have some effect, but the market impetus is so great that it will be minimized.

Solicitude of a Broker.

One of the big traders in one of the brokerage offices gives his broker, who, without question, is one of the best on the floor, considerable leeway in the matter of the execution of his orders, leaving to his discretion very often whether the order shall be executed in full or not, according to the way the stock looks in the particular crowd on the floor in which it is traded. One stock on the list showed some strength yesterday. This trader quietly said to his broker, who was in the customers' room, that he would like him to go over on the floor and buy him 2,000 shares. The order was given in a casual, nonchalant manner, and the broker hurried to the floor. He reappeared in a short time and told the trader that he had purchased only 500 shares, as he did not like the look of it at the moment. The trader nodded acquiescence, but a few minutes later the stock developed considerable strength and advanced ¾ of a point. Shaking his head grimly, the trader remarked that the joke was on him. He said that he was short of 2,000 shares in another office and his order was really a covering one and he was not going long of the stock. He did not say anything to the broker, however, about it.

Short Interest Eliminated.

It is the best opinion of those who are following the market closely that the short interest is practically eliminated and that the continued strength with absolutely no indication of any recession is deterring possible bears from making commitments on the short side. Apparently, however, the market has progressed far enough to be independent of the short interest. Heretofore one of the elements of strength in the list was the supposed presence of a heavy short interest. There has not been very much profit for the bears for some time. Recessions have not been extensive, and in fact for weeks, only the most agile scalping permitted the taking of profits on the short side. Undoubtedly, if the market showed any hesitancy at present figures, and stayed its advance long enough, a considerable line of short stock would be put out, but the programme would seem to be no hesitancy whatever.

Some Satisfactory Fundamentals.

Crop news yesterday was entirely satisfactory from every point of view. Reports from the South and Southwest were excellent, and from the Northwest it was said that seeding had been completed to the Canadian line. This is, at least, one fundamental factor that is bullish, although, of course, it is a long cry from seed time to harvest. No one but a bear, however, insists on anticipating trouble for the crops. Another factor of undoubted effectiveness is the continued ease of money. Neither gold exports nor Government demands have in the least affected the apparent ease in money available for speculative purposes. But it is curious that up to a few days ago many members of the banking fraternity were ultra-conservative, both as regards business conditions and the securities markets. This feeling of distrust has apparently passed away, which is a good thing for the markets themselves, indicating as it does the probability of continued ease for brokers in obtaining the necessary money.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—There was a budget of disappointing cables, a general run of highly favorable crop accounts, and a Wall Street failure to confront the trade at the opening yesterday. There was much irregularity, and, May contracts excepted, much weakness. Argentine exports were small, and the world's exports to be reported Monday were estimated at 6,500,000 bushels, hardly more than half last year's. Arrivals at Liverpool continue heavy, and for the last three days amount to 1,224,000 bushels. The Northwest statistical situation remains very firm. Showers were noted in parts of Nebraska and were quite general throughout the Northwest, where they were needed. Exporters took 30 loads. Cash wheat closed steady, with No. 2 red $1.06½ in elevator and $1.07½ free on board afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, $1.14¾, and No. 2 hard Winter, $1.12¾, free on board afloat.

CORN.—Prices steadied yesterday on wet weather in the belt, hindering farm work, but eased off later on prospects for larger car-lot arrivals at Chicago to-day. Exporters were out of the market, and cash corn closed at 76c for No. 2 in elevator and 75c nominal, free on board afloat; No. 2 white, 76c nominal.

INTER-MET FINANCES OPEN TO MORGAN & CO.

Two Months' Searching Inquiry Disclosed a Situation Pleasing to Both Bankers and Company.

ISSUE OVERSUBSCRIBED

Form of Mortgage Changed Somewhat to Include More Property Than Was at First Offered as Security.

Before undertaking the flotation of the Interborough Rapid Transit $25,000,000 note issue, J. P. Morgan & Co., it was learned in Wall Street yesterday, satisfied themselves thoroughly regarding the position of the company through a prolonged examination which the Public Service Commission conducted into the affairs of the company before giving its approval to the bond issue, part of which is pledged as security for the notes.

This examination lasted nearly two months. It was of the most searching character, and covered not only the company's accounts, but its physical property as well. As a result of the commission's investigation many amendments were made to the proposed form of the mortgage, and some of these amendments were made to include property which the company had not itself proposed to mortgage. The mortgage is a document of about 110 printed pages, and in its final form it represents the sixteenth printed revision of the original document.

One result of the examination was a recasting in some particulars of the balance sheet of the company as of Dec. 31 last. It is understood that one important point in which a change was made had reference to the miscellaneous expense items which were entered in the company's accounts under the head of equipment account. The commission suggested the opening of a special account known as "contractors' expense account," and to this was transferred items totaling $1,437,000, reducing the equipment account by that sum from the amount of $26,056,641, at which it stood on the company's books.

The results brought out by the examination are understood to have been eminently satisfactory to J. P. Morgan & Co., and the management of the company itself, although called upon to make some concessions in the matter of the terms of the mortgage, is believed to be much pleased with the facts brought out before the commission.

Applications received yesterday by J. P. Morgan & Co. for the note issue were reported to amount to enough to cover the issue several times over, the issue, according to some accounts, being four times oversubscribed.

BOSTON & ALBANY BONDS SOLD

New York Central Puts Out $7,000,000 Worth to Reimburse It for Advances.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, it was announced yesterday, has put out $7,000,000 4 per cent. 25-year bonds of the Boston & Albany Railroad to reimburse itself for expenditures made on that part of the system. The bonds have been purchased by N. W. Harris & Co. and Bond & Goodwin, who will offer them to the public on terms yet to be announced.

The New York Central controls the Boston & Albany by lease, the rental being $2,000,000 annually in cash and the payment of the interest on the Boston & Albany's bonded indebtedness by the New York Central. The last annual report of the New York Central showed an item of $2,922,421 charged against the Boston & Albany as advances for construction and equipment.

N. W. Harris & Co. are also the purchasers of the $5,500,000 5 per cent. refunding mortgage bonds of the Union Electric Light and Power Company of St. Louis, a subsidiary of the North American Company, told of in THE TIMES yesterday.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

Better crop prospects are mentioned in the summaries of the business situation by the leading commercial weeklies as explaining a growing optimism about the outlook found among the merchants. Bradstreet's says:

Improved weather conditions and excellent crop reports, coupled with the favorable construction put upon recent financial developments, have made for the growth of a better feeling as regards the outlook. Some gain is reported in a few sections, notably South and Central West, in retail trade, but hesitancy and conservatism rule operations to an extent not approached in recent years.

There is an unquestionably better tone in the securities markets, bonds have sold better, and the probable great success of a large bond issue, that of the Pennsylvania Railroad, coupled with very easy money, has led to a more confident feeling as to the future.

Dun's Review says:

Payments are a little more prompt, owing to the ease of money that has at last brought out a good demand for commercial paper, and financial sentiment must be decidedly better when prices of many securities rise to the highest point of the year, notwithstanding liberal exports of gold.

Railway earnings thus far reported for April were 16.9 per cent. smaller than in 1907, and immigration in March was 100,000 less than in the same month last year. Foreign commerce at this port alone for the latest week shows losses of $623,184 in exports and $3,444,828 in imports, as compared with the corresponding week of 1907. Bank exchanges at New York for the week were 31 per cent. smaller than a year previous.

METAL MARKET REPORTS.

Copper metal broke 7s 6d yesterday from the last prices of Thursday. The closing prices were: Spot, £57 17s 6d; futures, £58 7s 6d. Tin closed unchanged at £144 15s for spot and £143 10s for futures. THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Happenings of a Day in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 24.—Money was comparatively scarce on the market to-day and discounts were firmer.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was still affected by the new issues, and, although consols improved from the lowest, gilt-edged securities generally were heavy. Some selling was attributed to the belief that large houses are anxious to take up the Pennsylvania bonds, which are quoted at 1½ to 2½ premium. The Indian stocks were affected by the frontier trouble. Japanese securities were lower on the Chinese boycott as well as the unfavorable financial outlook.

American securities kept fairly steady in the forenoon, professional support maintaining parity prices. New York came strong in the afternoon and supported Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, and Denver & Rio Grande. This infused a moderate strength, and the market closed firm.

Bar silver quiet at 24⅞d per ounce.

Money, 2½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2 9-16@2⅝ per cent.; for three months' bills, 3 11-16 per cent.

PARIS, April 24.—The tone on the Bourse to-day was quiet, and prices were steady.

Three per cent. rentes, 96f 40c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 12½c for checks.

BERLIN, April 24.—Prices on the Boerse opened strong to-day upon yesterday's advices from New York and the increased demand for coal in the Essen district. The market became weaker later upon the unfavorable reports in the American iron trade. American railroad securities were strong.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

John C. Clark, manager of the New Haven office of Boody, McLellan & Co., is an applicant for membership in the Cotton Exchange.

J. Kennedy Tod & Co., who for nearly twenty years have had their offices in the United States Trust Company Building, at 45 Wall Street, will soon occupy offices in the Hanover Bank Building.

The Guaranty Trust Company of New York has ready for delivery in exchange for temporary certificates the engraved coupon certificates of the New York Central lines' equipment trust of 1907.

The Guaranty Trust Company announced yesterday that the $7,500,000 two-year 5 per cent. secured notes of the Norfolk & Western Railway Company, which it purchased the day before, had all been sold. The quick flotation of these notes impressed the Street with the improved condition of the security market.

BELMONT AND ROTHSCHILDS.

Official Denial That Relations of Two Houses Have Been Severed.

The inference drawn from the fact that Belmont & Co. had no public part in the flotation of the Pennsylvania Railroad bond issue, although the Rothschilds, whom Belmont & Co. have represented in this country for many years, were placing the bonds in London, was stated yesterday to be unfounded.

The following cable from N. M. Rothschild & Sons of London was made public here yesterday:

The statements in the New York newspapers in regard to the relations between our firm and Messrs. August Belmont & Co. are inaccurate in many respects, inasmuch as August Belmont & Co. have been requested within the last few days by us to represent us in New York in regard to certain details in connection with the impending issue in London of the Pennsylvania Railroad bonds. Moreover, Messrs. August Belmont & Co. continue at present, as in the past, the trusted agents in the United States of N. M. Rothschild & Sons.

The departure of President Shonts of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company for Europe, owing to the sudden death in Paris of his son-in-law, the Duc de Chaulnes, will necessitate the assumption of his duties as President of the company by August Belmont.

CONTROLLER CLOSES 2 BANKS

Believed That Suspension of Pennsylvania Institutions Is Only Temporary.

OIL CITY, Penn., April 24.—The Farmers' National Bank of Emlenton, Penn., with a capital of $50,000, and the First National Bank of Clintonville, Penn., with a capital of $25,000, both in Venango County, were closed to-day by the Controller of the Currency.

The Clintonville institution is said to be a subsidiary of the Emlenton Bank. It is believed the suspension is only temporary and that the stockholders and depositors will lose nothing.

BY W. J. LAMPTON.

Up from the tubes in the afternoon,
Singing a soft, sweet lullaby tune,
The Brooklyns came in their suits of gray
And walloped the Bigs in a 4-to-1 way.
The rooters they rooted to no avail,
And vainly begged Donlin to use his flail,
But all of their doing amounted to nil,
And after nine innings the Tubers were it.

Yesterday's game between New York and Brooklyn at the Polo Grounds was a repetition of the day before exactly in the matter of score and pretty much the same in the matter of ball playing. The day was considerably less tropical, and one might have supposed that the Giants would do something to hot up their home grounds and make it blistery for their visitors, but they didn't. Possibly it was because New York had taken on a hospitable intent and wished the strangers within their gates to have everything they wanted. Be that as it may, the visitors got everything they wanted without asking for it. They simply took it, and the Giants were helpless. It looked like a shame at times. Even the rooters felt sad about it, and a murky gloom settled down upon them so thick you might have scraped it off with a chip.

The audience was much smaller than the days previously, and vacant seats were in evidence all around the board. There was a feeling in the air somehow that New York was going to get it apienty, and the result of the game was not a matter of surprise as much as it was of pain. Out of all the balls pitched to them to be knocked as they pleased, and the Lord only knows how many there were, the Giants got only three hits. The Suburbas doubled this and went one better. The ladies were out in fair numbers, and all of them wore giant hats, whether they were in honor of the home team or not. They were a lot gayer than their namesakes, too.

The game was called a little after 4 o'clock, with the Superbas at the stick and a new pitcher before them in the person of Mr. Crandall, a husky-built chap who looked as if he could and would twirl the sphere to the everlasting destruction of all obstacles to victory. But he only looked it, as results proved. Col. Emslie did the umpiring act. The Colonel wears a visible mask, but his armor plate is concealed somewhere about his person and not worn over his clothes as in the Rudderham fanner. The Colonel has a fine voice for calling stations on the "L," when they don't want passengers to know what station it is. Otherwise nobody found any fault with him. Mr. Rudderham, down at second, listened to a few heated remarks from Capt. Donlin at one time during the game, but he bore up bravely. Being Ruddy-made, so to speak, he is not the kind to order. This is no joke. However, to get to the game.

Bresnahan was behind as usual, and Pattee came first to the post. He lambasted the first ball Mr. Crandull handed him and jogged along to first without being much crowded. Maloney followed with a foul over into the press gallery that might have splattered large quantities of valuable brains over the surrounding audience, but fortunately it did not. Somebody suggested that maybe Maloney had got a tip from Mr. Jerome to land a hot one on the newspapers. Anyhow, the next thing he did was to pop up a little foul fly—hardly a fly either, not more than a gnat—and Bresnahan got it in his fly trap. Burch sent one over the grand stand roof to some hill-billie friend of his on the bluff, then sacrificed to first, and Pattee went to second. Jordan sent one over to first to say that he wouldn't follow it. Side out, and nothing to show for it.

Pastorious, a left-hander, faced the Giants in the box, and Ritter stood behind, both different from Thursday. Shannon and Tenney outed without and difficulty, apparently, and Donlin came forward. Some of the applause saved over from Monday was rooted out of the bleachers and passed up to him. Then he sent a homeless one over to second, which arrived at first before he did, with the usual result. Side out and nothing doing.

When Whitey Alperman came to stick in the second he didn't have on the new shoes he won yesterday on that home run, and he didn't get a great deal of rooter-mystery. He got to first on an earth scraper to centre. While Hummel was holding the stick ready for action Whitey took a long chance from first and the first thing the Giants knew he had stolen second. He barely escaped arrest, but he got away with the bag all right. Hummel sent one to Tenney at first and staid home. Lewis got to first, but Alperman was caught going up to third, and then Lewis tried to steal second. He was caught in the act and sent up. No runs.

Bresnahan and Nicklin got their bases on balls and Seymour didn't get anything but out on a small roller. Base stealing seemed to be popular, and Bresnahan tried it with success before Nicklin got the call to first. While Bridwell was engaging the attention of the battery, Nicklin got to third and Bresnahan came home. One run. Lucky inning.

The Giants did it so Thursday, and may again to-day. Nobody knows what the Giants will do when they don't get started once. Crandall, the new pitch, came to the bat on a slight wave of applause, merely as a bleacher greeting. A fan to keep him cool, as it were. He didn't do anything, because Bridwell, in an attempted larceny of the second bag, was run in. Nothing. Laughing Loole Ritter sent a grassy to centre and got first. Pastorius fouled a time or two, and went to first on called balls. Pattee sent a sacrifice to pitch, who put it over to first. Tenney taking it on a finger-up clutch that brought the rooters forth in fine frenzy. Maloney struck out, but before he did Ritter got to third and Pastorius to second. The audience showed signs of getting excited, and became quite so when Ritter came home on a wild pitch that hit the backstop. Maloney went out on strikes, and Burch sent one to short that beat him to first. One run. Nothing stirring in the next half except the fly work of Burch in right field. He got all that came his way. Donlin sent him a high ball, and though Burch is on the water wagon he didn't hesitate a moment, but took it straight. No runs.

Jordan got one run in the fourth inning, having walked to first, stolen second, and got home on Nicklin's muff before he was locked out. Thus do we see virtue rewarded. Lewis was squeezed out, and Ritter failed to get to first on a gentle knock. The Giants didn't do a thing but get out after they go in. Devlin got to first on a walk, but he tried to break the Eighth Commandment on second and failed.

The Tubers played the game in New York style in their half of the fifth, and got what the Giants got in eight innings. The Giants got the same as usual with one exception in the third. They were getting used to it. Again in the sixth the Tubers played Giants' ball. Burch knocking three large holes in the atmosphere or words to that effect. However, Burch evened up for it when he went out to his field and took a long fly from Seymour on a run and jump that tumbled him heels over head, but didn't make him let go his hold. Nothing finer has been seen in that neighborhood, and Burch got more applause than anybody yet except Donlin when he saved the game for the Giants on Monday. Nobody got as far as first.

There was the usual "stretch" in the seventh, and it felt good, because the air was rather chilly and stiffening, and it was comfortable to get the kinks thawed out a bit. The thrilling event of the seventh was Alperman's run home, not home run. He got to first on a Brooklyn baby-sized tap over to third. Hummel sacrificed to get him to second. Lewis fluked out to first, and Whitey got third. Ritter knocked one over that kissed a farewell to Devlin's fingers and passed on. So did Whitey, making the home port safely. Capt. Donlin got a fly off Pastorious. One run.

For the Giants, Devlin got to first on a shin ball. It hurt some, but he used the first bag for a poultice and drew the hurt out. By the time Devlin got as far as second it was time for him to go on to his position at third. No runs.

In the first half of No. 8 Pattee got to first on a right-grounder. Pattee stole second unblushingly. Maloney got to first and tried to steal second, but failed in his felonious attempt. Burch went out on a biff to short, but Pattee got his home work in and scored. One run.

Merkle came to the bat for Crandell and didn't get to first on a little one to short. Shannon and Tenney followed as fast as they could on short shots. No runs.

The ninth opened with the usual suppressed excitement, but not so strong. The Giants were gone goslings, and everybody had a hunch to that effect. Malarkey came to the box instead of Crandall, and Alperman lifted the first one he sent in. It was a good lift all right, but it was unfortunate in lighting. Donlin got it. Hummel came mighty near making a home run. If he had got the ball a few feet further to the right of the foul flag it would have been a winner, but he did not. As it was the ball looked as if it were going up to see how the Briarcliff races had come out. Somebody said it had been caught by a motorman on an elevated train. On the next try Hummy only did half as well and got a two-baser for a long one to left. He was left at third by Ritter and Lewis quitting this side of first. No runs.

Donlin made a hit in the last half of the last. Applause. Then he stole second and third right before everybody. Seymour burched one to right, Bresnahan hummelled a long one to left, Devlin maloneyed one to centre, and the jig was up. It was a fly time for the Tubers.

It took an hour and forty-five minutes to get five runs worked off by eighteen able-bodied men, four-fifths of them going over to Brooklyn with the Tubers on their return to their rural retreat on Long Island. But let not New Yorkers despair. There are other days yet to play, and after they get well in practice they will do better. The Suburbas ain't much for ball players, nohow. Just wait, Little Old New York has got something up her sleeve. The tale told in figures is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, April 24.—The New York Americans were defeated here today in a great twelve-inning battle between Glade and Bender by 3 to 2. Philadelphia won on a pass, an error by Elberfeld, and Nichols's double in the twelfth. After the second inning the home team did not get a hit off Glade until the ninth. The score:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Trask Estate Holdings in the Bronx to be Sold at Auction—Six Hundred Lots Involved—Day's Dealings by Brokers and in the Salesroom.

The Benjamin I. H. Trask estate property in the Bronx, consisting of 600 lots, is to be sold at auction on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 26 and 27, by Joseph P. Day.

The lots are on Westchester, Watson, Ludlow, Morrison, Harrod, Metcalf, and Story Avenues and Clason Point Road. This property is just south of the well-known Gleason holdings on Westchester Avenue, where there is a large settlement of attractive two-family houses. This neighborhood is about five minutes' ride from Simpson Street Subway Station by the Westchester Avenue trolley. There is a proposed station on the New Haven Road at the junction of Westchester Avenue and Clason Point Road, adjoinng the property.

The announcement of this sale comes at the same time as the completion of the report of the Commissioners with reference to the partitioning of the Trask estate. The report has been filed by John N. Golding, James L. Wells, and William E. Davies, of Maclay & Davies, as Commissioners, and will be presented to Judge Dowling for approval to-day.

Paese & Elliman, in conjunction with Dennis & Preston, have sold for James M. Duane, 62 East Fifty-fifth Street, a five-story American-basement dwelling, 16.8 by 100.5. The buyer will occupy the house.

Frederick T. Barry was associated with Romaine C. Nichols & Co. in the sale of the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Eighty-fifth Street to James B. Clews.

Estate Sells on Fourth Street.

N. Brigham Hall & Son have sold for the Radford estate to H. E. Sulzer 175 West Fourth Street, a three-story dwelling, 18 by 55.

Cornelius F. Sheahan is the buyer of the properties 320 and 322 West Thirty-fourth Street and 323 West Thirty-fourth Street.

West 104th Street Dwelling Sold.

New Building on 25th Street.

Plans have been filed for the eleven-story mercantile building to be erected at 45 to 51 West Twenty-fifth Street by the Building and Engineering Company, of which William H. Birkmire is President. It will have a frontage of 100 feet and will cost $400,000.

M. & L. Hess deny the reported sale of 460 and 462 Sixth Avenue by them, and state further that they are not now negotiating for the sale of the said property.

To Build on Claremont Avenue.

John C. Watson is preparing plans for six-story apartment houses to be erected by Josl Marks on the plot, 100 by 100, on the east side of Claremont Avenue, 100 feet north of 122d Street.

Elsie Oppenheim has sold to William A. Pond Phipps 237 and 239 West 115th Street, a five-story flat, on plot 50 by 100.11.

Deal for Eleventh Avenue Flat.

John J. Boylan has sold for John W. and Emma Henrietta Haslop to Philip Ryan the four-story flat, with store, 616 Eleventh Avenue, on a lot 18 by 85.

Nellie Ferguson has resold 774 Ninth Avenue, a five-story flat on lot 25 by 100.

Tenants for 42d Street Stores.

The H. H. Fuller Realty Company has leased for the Improved Property Holding Company to the Millington Company, for ten years, the store and basement at 63 West Forty-second Street; also, for the estate of M. C. Wotton to the Manhattan Electrical Supply Company, for ten years, the store and basement at 110 West Forty-second Street.

The same brokers have also leased for Coleman & Krause to the Charles J. Bogue Electrical Company, the fifth loft in the building at 513½ and 515 West Twenty-ninth Street.

Denzer Brothers have leased for Fitch, Mott & Grant, as attorneys, the store and basement at 411 Broadway, for a long term of years; also, the stores at 8 Greene Street, 26 Walker Street, 22 Lispenard Street, 19 Lispenard Street, and 163 Bowery.

G. W. Barney has leased to G. H. Lowell & Co. 2,500 square feet of space in the building at 321 Greenwich Street; also, to Josephson Brothers 2,500 square feet in 498 Broome Street, and to S. Bercowitz 2,500 square feet in 145 Chambers Street.

$400,000 Lease on Heights Closed.

A very interesting lease which has been pending for some time has been closed by L. J. Phillips & Co., representing the lessor, and Charles Griffith Moses & Brother, representing the lessees. The property at the southeast corner of Broadway and 145th Street, 100 by 100, owned by the Harlem Heights Realty Company, was leased to John J. and Patrick J. Healy for twenty-one years. The owners are to erect a two-story and basement business building with stores on the street floor and offices and meeting hall on the second floor, from plans by Architect Franklin M. Small. The Messrs. Healy intend to use the corner store for a high class café and restaurant. The lease involves about $400,000, and is made on a net investment basis.

It is significant that six of the stores in the proposed building have been leased from the plans at record-breaking rentals for the neighborhood.

East 117th Street Purchase.

Sisca & Co. have sold for Mrs. Annie Stember the four-story single flat 409 East 117th Street, 16.8 by 100, to Angelo D'Antuono.

G. Brettell & Son have leased for Louis Lese a Mrs. Kelly 315 East 125th Street, a three-story brick dwelling, and for Oak & Edelstein to a Mr. Knapp 355 East 124th Street, a three-story dwelling.

Company Sells on Prospect Avenue.

The Gaines-Roberts Company has sold 961 Prospect Avenue, a new six-story apartment house, on plot 40 by 195, about 150 feet north of 163d Street.

S. Ullman has sold for the Thornton Brothers' Company to C. Stichtenoth 360 East 169th Street, a three-story two-family house, 20 by 90.

Ernst & Cahn have sold in conjunction with J. J. Pitman, 2,303 Cambreling Avenue, a two-story house, on lot 16.8 by 100, to Morris Kann.

Sale of Franklin Avenue House.

Williamson & Bryan have sold for Mrs. Lucy Hargrove the four-story flat, 1,144 Franklin Avenue, 27.6 by 100.

J. J. Haggerty has sold for W. R. Rose the two-family frame house 1,503 Hoe Avenue, on lot 25 by 100.

P. N. Gardner has sold for Richard Rick the two two-family frame houses 1,922 and 1,924 Daly Avenue, near Tremont Avenue; also, for George Schmid, two lots on the west side of Ryer Avenue, 420 feet north of Burnside Avenue, 30 by 137.

Brook Avenue Tenement in Deal.

Leo M. Mosauer of the office of Jacob Leitner has sold for Stevenson & Raldiris the recently completed six-story tenement, with store, 1,525 Brook Avenue, to the Sandow Realty Company; also, for David Greenfeld, the vacant plot on the east side of Brook Avenue, 126 feet north of 170th Street, 48 by 100.

Jacob Leitner has sold for Morris Amdur the two-story two-family brick house, on plot 25 by 100, at 1,039 Macy Place; also, for Emanuel Stern, the plot on the west side of Kelly Street, 200 feet north of Longwood Avenue, 80 by 100, to the Kellwood Realty Company, which will erect two five-story, forty-foot houses.

Benjamin Gainsburg has sold to M. Gertrude Baxter the plot, 50.4 by 115.6 by 50 by 121.8, at the northeast corner of Middletown Road and Pilgrim Avenue.

Ernst & Cahn and Thomas F. Murphy have sold for Mrs. Mary E. Allen 147 Olinville Avenue, a two-family house, on lot 25 by 100.

OPPORTUNITY FOR

BREEDERS DAIRYMEN GENTLEMEN FARMERS

At Glencoe Station, Baltimore Co., Md., just 20 miles from Baltimore, lies Filston, a self-supporting estate; 1,277 acres of fertile fields, meadows, pastures, woodlands; 5 complete farms. Can be purchased separately or as a whole.

The manor house is an ideal country residence, with all modern conveniences; 3 other dwelling houses, 12 tenant houses, 9 barns, dairies, and other outbuildings; 400 head of registered Jersey cows and a complete poultry-breeding outfit that cost $12,000. On one of the farms is a large modern school building, admirably adapted to the purposes of a sanitarium or a boarding school.

Filston farm and dairy products are in greater demand than can be supplied. This can be largely increased. As a business proposition for dairymen, breeders, gentlemen farmers, no place can excel it.

The property must be sold at auction on May 25 by order of court, to settle the estate of the late owner, deceased.

SAY JEROME HELPED TRACTION MAGNATES

MR. QUIGG'S ACCELERATIONS

Testimony by Him That He Handed $20,000 Traction Money to Odell and Spent Thousands as He Liked.

It was learned yesterday that when the investigation into the conduct of District Attorney Jerome is resumed before Richard L. Hand next week, a large part of the testimony taken before the Grand Jury in the recent traction inquiry will be put in evidence as showing the attitude of Mr. Jerome toward the corporation and its officials under investigation. Such evidence will fall under the twelfth charge made by the King Committee of the Metropolitan Street Railway stockholders to Gov. Hughes, on which the removal of Mr. Jerome from office is sought. In that charge it is said:

Mr. Jerome has assumed the attitude of their (the traction managers) protector and their advocate, and has avoided investigation.

One of the bits of Grand Jury record on which stress is laid in this connection is the statement of a juror to William F. King, Chairman of the committee, when Mr. King appeared before the Grand Jury on Jan. 27. The grand juror said:

"We tried to get some information from Mr. Jerome that we can act on and he tells us that he has no material that he can bring us to indict anybody. We don't know where to get it."

Jerome Could See No Crime.

Another section of the Grand Jury minutes to which importance is attached as showing the disposition of the District Attorney is a colloquy between Mr. Jerome and Franklin Pierce, counsel for the King committee, when Mr. Pierce was before the Grand Jury. Mr. Pierce, who is a former Assistant District Attorney, wanted to get some criminal action against the five participants in the Wall & Cortlandt Street Ferries Division. Mr. Jerome wanted to know how such a prosecution would be approached.

"The way to try the case," said Mr. Pierce, "is to indict these men for a criminal conspiracy and then to bring in all the facts we want."

"Point out the section of the Penal Code under which such a prosecution would stand!" demanded Mr. Jerome.

"Section 168 of the Penal Code," rejoined Mr. Pierce; "a conspiracy to take the property of the railway over to themselves. Conspiracy itself is a crime."

"What crime did they conspire to commit?" persisted Mr. Jerome.

"They conspired to take the money of the corporation with which they were connected over to themselves, which is grand larceny when they do it," returned the lawyer for the Stockholders' Committee.

"What was done?" Mr. Jerome questioned.

"What was done!" Mr. Pierce retorted, "Why, do you think that ten men who sell the franchise for nearly a million dollars, who have checks payable for nearly a million, when the real purchase price was only $200,000, and have the checks made out for a larger sum—was not that drawing money out of a corporation, taking it over to themselves?"

"Who were the men?" Mr. Jerome asked.

"Widener and Dolan and Elkins—" Mr. Pierce began.

"They were not officers of the company," objected Mr. Jerome.

"I don't care," said Mr. Pierce, "they acted together and got $700,000."

"They swore they did not," returned Mr. Jerome, and he proceeded to read from the testimony taken before the Public Service Commission given by other witnesses. Mr. Pierce rejoined that the statements of persons accused had not, in his experience, been taken as conclusive proof of innocence, and the incident was at an end.

Some of the Grand Jury testimony of Lemuel Ely Quigg the "accelerator of public opinion," and particularly that showing how he took the Metropolitan Street Railway's $20,000 to Chairman B. B. Odell of the Republican State Committee in the 1903 campaign, is of an interesting character. Mr. Jerome led up to this by referring to the check for $37,492.56 drawn by the Metropolitan Securities Company in 1904 to refund the $20,000 of Odell money and the $16,000 that went to Tammany Hall on the same day, and asked Mr. Quigg what he knew about it.

Quigg Took $20,000 to Odell.

"I only know this," Mr. Quigg said, "that, without attempting to fix the year as an independent act of memory, which I could not do, some years ago, and at about that period of time, Mr. Vreeland asked me to deliver an envelope to Gov. Odell. I took the envelope and called Gov. Odell on the 'phone, and he said he would be at the Fifth Avenue Hotel at the Republican State Headquarters at a certain time, and I was there at the time with the envelope. I did not then know what it contained. I went into his room and gave him the envelope, and he opened it in my presence and counted twenty one-thousand-dollar bills, and he handed them to Col. Fox."

Q.—That is Col. Reuben Fox? A.—Reuben Fox, the Secretary of the committee, who was there at that time and in the room, and told him to give the money to Gen. McAlpin, who was Treasurer of the committee.

Q.—Of the State Committee? A.—Of the State Committee.

Q.—Of the Republican Party? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You simply acted as a messenger? A.—Yes, I simply acted as a messenger in the matter.

Q.—As to the $16,700 alleged to have gone to Tammany Hall, have you any knowledge? A.—I know nothing about it.

A juror asked Mr. Quigg if Mr. Vreeland said anything to him about the envelope being a valuable one or intimating what it contained, or that Quigg should exercise care in seeing that it was safely delivered.

"No, Sir," Mr. Quigg replied. "I think it only fair to say Mr. Vreeland would know he did not have to give any instruction of that kind. * * * I had no doubt it contained money—had no doubt it was a political contribution."

One of the jurors insisted that Mr. Quigg should try to find the vouchers showing how he disbursed the $24,000 spent in ferreting out those persons back of the Metropolitan raid in 1904, and Mr. Jerome asked Mr. Quigg to look the matter up. Mr. Quigg said he generally got his money from Mr. Francis, the Secretary of the Morton Trust Company, sometimes in bills and sometimes in checks.

"Did you turn in vouchers for your expenses?" a juror asked.

Quigg Spent Money as He Liked.

"No, sir," Quigg said, "they were essentially confidential, and I did not make any explanation of them to anybody."

"They took your word for the expenses altogether?"

"Yes, sir," Quigg replied.

Mr. Quigg was subsequently recalled, and testified to disbursements that he made by checks, showing two checks aggregating $1,500 for detective services and a check for $1,900 for stenographers' notes of the trial of H. H. Vreeland on charges of criminal libel preferred by William N. Amory. There were three checks for printing, bringing the aggregate of expenditures accounted for up to $13,500.

"The balance of the expenditure I made in cash," Mr. Quigg said. "I employed a particular man named Abel, and I paid him thousands of dollars, and I don't know how much I spent myself—a considerable sum. I have no memorandum of these expenditures. I made up a memorandum at the time which amounted to about $16,000 of expenditures over and above the $10,000 that I received."

This was all there was of the examination of Mr. Quigg. He was not questioned as to the expenditures by himself and Abel in cash or as who the man Abel was. Quigg was not asked as to his activities as an accelerator of public opinion in the campaign of the Ryan subway syndicate upon the Belmont interests between 1904 and the Inter.-Met. merger in January, 1906. Mr. Quigg's man Abel was not called as a witness before the Grand Jury. Mr. Quigg testified before the Public Service Commission that he spent more than $100,000 in that work of acceleration. Abel turned out to be a clerk in Quigg's office.

William M. Ivins, special counsel for the Public Service Commission, made a statement before the Grand Jury in which he had this to say of the reasons why Mr. Ryan and Mr. Vreeland were not called by the commission in its traction inquiry:

"It was the judgment of the commission at the time, and it was my judgment as well, that every effort should be exhausted before the calling either of those parties, in view of the fact that under the Public Service act, if any one were called and testified in regard to these matters he would gain immunity thereby from criminal pursuit."

THE FAKER'S DANCE.

Costumes Not So Original as the Ball Directions—Plenty of Dancing.

The Society of American Fakirs, who on work days are attendants at the Art Students' League, Broadway and Fifty-seventh Street, closed their seventeenth annual exhibition of fake pictures last night, celebrating the same with a "Die Lustig Fakirs' Dance" on the top floor of the League building.

The top floor and most of the other floors were thickly populated with dancers and near-dancers. It was a fancy costume affair. These figures who have not been seen at a fancy ball for 213 years were noted.

Young man representing a cowboy, a dairy maid with deep red cheeks, an uneasy cavalier, an Indian, a Roman gladiator who limped, a Buster Brown, three spinsters representing doll babies—like the pony ballets, you know; thirteen clowns.

The programme contained these directions:

Watch your step in getting on and off trains. On entering the corridor keep on moving until you find space in which to stand on your own feet. If you weary of the Rapid Transit, get a transfer and take your baggage to a cosy corner—there you might try the Belt Line.

Beware of fakes, (not Fakirs,) impressionists, secessionists, lorgnettes, coquetts, &c., and remember that the largest soles are not necessarily indicative of the best Soul Kiss.

You'll find two heads better than one—and do not forget leap year. It is not necessary to pick out a nightmare for the Dream Waltz.

At midnight do not walk your affinity around the corner or down the fire escape—take her to Carrie's Cafe, where you can get entertainment from the Girl Behind the Counter.

There were twenty-four regular dances on the programme and six extras. Each of them, by hoodwinking the orchestra with applause, was strung out into from one to three encores. All this began at 9 o'clock last night, and ended—oh, well, school won't keep, anyway, until Monday.

Several expressed themselves at 3 A. M. as having begun to have a good time.

DEATH THREAT FOR WITNESS.

Father and Two Sons Arrested for Trying to Keep Him from Trial.

A father and two sons were locked up in Police Headquarters last night, charged with having threatened death to a witness in a case now on trial in Part IV., General Sessions. The prisoners are Carmela Giannone and Michael Giannone, jewelers, of 81 Oliver Street, and Cologero Giannone, a photographer, of 81 Cherry Street. They were arrested by Lieuts. Russo and Kesselmark of the District Attorney's office on complaint of Luigi Favate, who has a photograph studio at 71 Mulberry Street.

Pietro Giannone, another son of Carmela, is serving a long sentence for hiring assassins to kill Favate. Pietro had been brought up in Favate's studio. He entertained an enmity against Favate, said to be inspired by an affection for the latter's wife. He hired Bruno Cardea and two other men to kill Favate. They made the attempt in December, 1906, but only succeeded in wounding the photographer. Cardea was caught and sent to Auburn for five years. He had served but a few months when he sent for Detective Russo and confessed the plot to kill Favate. On the strength of this Pietro was arrested and sentenced by Judge Foster to not more than twenty-four years. It was in connection with this trial that Cardea is being tried for perjury and Favate is a witness. The latter was to have appeared as a witness yesterday, but instead he telephones to Detective Russo that the Giannone family had threatened to cut his heart out if he did appear. The Elizabeth Street Police Station was notified, and two policemen were sent to escort him to court. There he again told the story of the Giannones' visit to his studio and the threats made, with the result that they were arrested.

NEW SOCIALIST BODY.

Composed Wholly of Clergymen, Who Will Hold a Convention.

It was officially announced yesterday that a new organization of church Socialists has just been formed in this city, composed altogether of clergymen of various denominations, and has called a convention to take place in Manhattan from June 1 to June 3 to form a National body of church Socialists, all of whom will be clergymen.

The new body, which is to be known as the Ministers' Socialist Conference, is to be a secret body. Among its members are the Rev. Alexander F. Irvine of the Church of the Ascension, the Rev. Oliver C. Housman of the Second German Baptist Church of Manhattan, and 200 others.

The secretary of the new body is the Rev. John D. Long, pastor of the Parkside Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. He said last night:

"The clergymen who have affiliated with the new organization have come to the conclusion that Christianity will not work under a competitive commercial system, and that the inauguration of Socialism is necessary for the needs of civilized human beings."

ELOPEMENT? NOT A BIT.

Motor Call at Marriage License Bureau Sets Romancers Working.

Motoring in from the auto race at Briarcliff yesterday afternoon, Miss Miriam Helen Wallach of 124 West 118th Street and Nathan Anthony Eisler obtained a marriage license at the City Hall.

Rumors that it was an elopement promptly flew around.

"We are to be married on the 2d of June at the Hotel Savoy," said Miss Wallach last night, and we've been engaged for several weeks. We simply were ahead of time getting the license."

Mr. Eisler, who controls several packing houses, lives at 212 Edgecomb Avenue.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., April 24.—Burglars who rode in motor cars broke into the Summer residence of Charles E. Merrill, in New Canaan, last evening, and carried away about $1,500 worth of table silverware.

Neighbors of the Merrills say that two motor cars drew up near the Merrill residence about 1 o'clock this morning.

Mr. Merrill is a publisher, and his New York residence is at 130 East Sixty-seventh Street.

James Smith, Jr., for Delegate at Large

At a caucus in Newark last night of the delegates to the Democratic State Convention, to be held in Trenton next Tuesday, it was decided to go to Trenton pledged for the selection of James Smith, Jr., for delegate at large to the National Convention, and John S. Bell of Newark as alternate. The Seventh and Eighth Congressional Districts elected as delegates to Denver Alderman John F. Sinnott and John R. Hardin of Newark, and City Counsel James R. Nugent of Newark and Walter I. McCoy of South Orange, respectively.

SCOTCH WHISKY HIT BY PURE FOOD ACT

AMBASSADOR APPEALED TO

Distillers Have Now Asked Mr. Bryce to Help Them—Treated the Law as a Joke.

Importers of Scotch and Irish whiskies were much interested yesterday in the dispatch from London telling that the Foreign Office had cabled to Ambassador Bryce to make an investigation regarding the alleged "hold up" of all imported whiskies at this port, by order of Dr. Harvey Wiley, the chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture.

In an interview with a TIMES reporter yesterday, one of the oldest importers of Scotch whisky said: "The Pure Food act came into force on Jan. 1, 1907, but it was not put into operation in the imported liquors trade till April 1 this year. At that time a circular was sent by Dr. Wiley to the chief of the laboratories here, instructing him to hold up all imported whiskies that he had any doubt about not complying with all the requirements of the Pure Food act. The circular also stated that the department had so much work on hand that it could deal only with the foreign whiskies at present, and would not deal with the wines and other imported liquors.

"Some whiskies were held up because it was stated that they were not pot-still whiskies, which could not be proved by chemical analysis. Other brands did not have the word 'blend' printed plainly on their bottles, having omitted it, either intentionally or inadvertently, through ignorance of the requirements of the new act.

"The use of coloring ingredients was the objection raised to some brands, but that was ridiculous, because all whiskies, whether American, Scotch, or Irish, are colored with burned sugar, the same as rum or brandy.

"Some of the distillers have treated the new Pure Food act as a joke, and did not comply with any of its requirements, because they believed it would never be put into operation. This is very hard on the other importers in the trade who have carried out the instructions received from the Department of Agriculture.

"The department at Washington has been requested to give a decision as soon as possible, so that all importers who have met the requirements of the Pure Food and Drug act may get their goods out of bond, and the British Ambassador has been asked to do all in his power to expedite the decision.

"The delay may be vexatious, but it is all for the benefit of the public," continued the importer, "because when the Pure Food act gets to work properly in this city the people will have a chance to get their liquors in an unadulterated form, which is not always so at present."

The amendments to the Penal Code making it a penal offense for any person to refill a liquor bottle passed the Legislature before adjournment, and now awaits Gov. Hughes's signature. It provides a penalty of $100 fine for the first offense and imprisonment for the second offense. The Importers' Protection Society will employ men to see that the retailers obey the law.

SHIP BATONYI HORSES HERE.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 24.—The horses which were re-replevined by Deputy Sheriff Frank P. King from Aurel Batonyi's farm in Middletown Thursday have been shipped to New York.

Mr. Batonyi says no papers were served upon him; that he was absent from the farm when his property was taken. He has requested his Newport attorney to begin suit as soon as it can be learned who is behind the action.

No one connected with the Sheriff's office will give the name of the person who had Charles H. Keohne, Jr., of Newport issue the re-replevin writ.

IN THE COOL OF THE EVENING

By ALFRED NOYES.

IN the cool of the evening, when the low sweet whispers waken,
When the laborers turn them homeward, and the weary have their will,
When the censers of the roses o'er the forest aisles are shaken,
Is it but the wind that cometh o'er the far green hill?

Rustle all the meadow-grass and bend the dewy fern;
They say 'tis but the winds that bow the reeds in prayer together,
And fill the shaken pools with fire along the shadowy burn.

They have veiled His lovely vesture with the darkness of a name!
Thro' His Garden, thro' His Garden, it is but the wind that moveth,
No more! But O the miracle, the miracle is the same.

In the cool of the evening, when the sky is an old story,
Slowly dying, but remembered, ay, and loved with passion still • • •

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

OUR London correspondent confesses himself puzzled over the popularity in Great Britain of the novels of Mrs. Benyon Puddicombe—which is, we believe, the real name of the author who calls herself "Allen Raine." She began to write fiction only a few years ago, but already the sale of her books approaches two million copies. All the reviewers in England are reading her latest production, "Neither Storehouse Nor Barn," with the special purpose of finding, if possible, the secret of the lady's success. Some of them give it up, as does our correspondent. Others have arrived at conclusions satisfying perhaps to themselves. The reviewer of The London Chronicle announces that the work of this author combines idealism, humanity gilded by that idealism, a quiet note of romance, and direct and good writing. The judgment may be true, but it explains little. Everybody agrees that from the standpoint of the critic or the practiced reader, Allen Raine's work is commonplace. The Telegraph's reviewer finds that it is "Miss Allen Raine's limpid simplicity and bright, idyllic imagination which have gained her the suffrages of so large a public." The new book opens thus: "A red sunset, barred with gold and purple, a brilliant star, a blackbird's song coming up from the dim gray garden." The heroine, an unsophisticated Welsh maiden, left by the death of her father, a Welsh parson, without "storehouse or barn," tramps to the home of an unknown aunt, in the harmless company of a dreaming lover. But the story of the Odyssey makes trouble, of course, but all comes out right at last, to the satisfaction of the quarter of a million readers whom the publishers are preparing to supply with the book. While Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Carnegie are founding institutions for research, it might be intimated to them that nothing is at present more in need of determination than the elements which make a work of fiction popular.

The religious press of the country is discussing a suggestion made by Dr. John Wright of St. Paul that the centennial of the translation of the Septuagint into English—the translation was made by an American, Charles Thomson, Secretary to the Continental Congress—be appropriately observed. Thomson was a familiar friend of Washington, and was appointed to announce to him his election as President. After serving the Congress for five years he resigned in order to give his whole time to the translation upon which he was engaged. It is singular that the Septuagint had so long escaped translation into English. It is the most highly esteemed version of the Old Testament, being that in use in the Holy Land at the time of Jesus, as well as that chiefly used as basis for the Vulgate and other famous versions. Thomson's translation is still recognized as most faithful. It was constantly consulted by the American Revisers of 1881 and has been reprinted in England as late as last year. The proposal is made that the Congress recognize this work of a Continental patriot by issuing a centennial edition of Thomson's Septuagint, after the precedent made by the issue by the Fifty-seventh Congress of Jefferson's "The Morals of Jesus."

Few writers of the last century knew their London so well as did Sir Walter Besant. His novels, although frequently reminiscent of Dickens, for whom he had a profound admiration, have underlying their broad touches of humor and pathos a knowledge of London life in its humbler aspects that has seldom been surpassed and that—in at least one instance, "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," was productive of definite, practical results, since it was this novel that led to the erection of the People's Palace in the East End of the city. At his death, in 1901, Sir Walter Besant left an unpublished work which seems calculated from its subject to form a fitting climax to the labors which he made particularly his own. The work in question is entitled "The Survey of London," and deals successively with that city in its prehistoric, Roman, Saxon, and Norman periods of development. Five installments of this magnum opus of Sir Walter Besant's have already been published. This Spring the sixth and last installment will be published by the Macmillan Company, and with the appearance of this volume will be completed an unbroken history of the English metropolis from its earliest beginnings to the end of the eighteenth century.

A book just issued in England under the somewhat puzzling title "H. M. I.," which may doubtless be interpreted "His Majesty's Inspector" of Schools, is full of good stories. Here is one, narrating a conversation between Bishop Wilberforce and the Marchioness of A. The Bishop tells the story:

> At dinner I sat next a very worthy, elderly man of the name of Polycarp, who in a very touching manner was recounting to me the many blessings which he had received in the course of a life prolonged beyond the usual limits.
> Lady A. (stifling a yawn): "Dear me, Bishop."
> Bishop: "Yes." And it appeared that he considered the chief of his blessings to be that he had had twenty-three children. And while I was trying to find words to express my opinion that some people might regard that as a not unmixed blessing, a black-eyed lady, whom I had observed to be listening with much attention to our conversation, leant across the table, and said with remarkable distinctness: "Only sixteen were mine, Mr. Polycarp."

The English Poet Laureate has completed a volume to be called "Sacred and Profane Love"—the title coming, of course, from the Villa Borghese Titian. From the accounts of it Mr. Austin's idea is nearly as much a mystery as that of the picture. It is an allegory, "distinct from any hitherto ascribed to the picture, contrasting, as it does, worldly ambition with spiritual aspiration, the political career in its lowest aspect with the literary career in its highest." A "Northern youth in meditative mood" lies "pondering records of the Roman past," when two shapes appear to him—one promising him the fulfillment of his wildest dreams of earthly greatness, the other offering the nobility of mind and joy of heart that belong to the poet.

An English publication for youth has been asking its boy readers to name their favorite books. Eight hundred replies were sent in answer to the query, "What do you think the twelve best books for boys ever written?" A book by the editor of the publication gets into the list, possibly out of the boy correspondents' sense of courtesy, but otherwise the favorites were reported to be in this order: "Tom Brown's Schooldays," "Treasure Island," "Robinson Crusoe," "Westward Ho!" "Sherlock Holmes," "Ivanhoe," "King Solomon's Mines," "Coral Island," by Ballantyne; "The Fifth Form at St. Dominic's," by Talbot Baines Reed; Fenimore Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans," and Marryat's "Midshipman Easy."

The forthcoming number of The Library will contain an important article by Mr. W. W. Greg "On Certain False Dates in Shakespearean Quartos," setting forth the view that quartos of "The Merchant of Venice" and "Midsummer Night's Dream" dated 1600, and of "King Lear" and "Henry V." dated 1608, were all printed in 1619.

A marriage of interest to literary circles is announced in Paris. M. Michel Psichari, a writer, and son of Prof. Jean Psichari, the philologist, who married a daughter of Renan, is to marry Mlle. France Thibault, the daughter of Anatole France.

"ON THE WITNESS STAND."

Professor Hugo Munsterberg Inquires Into the Reliability of Human Testimony —Astonishing Fallibility of Eye, Ear, and Memory

MANY "CONFESSIONS" UNTRUE.

Effect on Witness, Judge, and Jurors of Suggestion, Conscious or Unconscious.

MOST of the current information as to what is doing, and how, and why, and to what purpose, in psychological laboratories is misinformation — a lamentable fact for which, alas! the newspapers are chiefly responsible, since in this case as in so many others, their "science" has been a presentation of the sensational, of possibilities disguised as actualities, of hopes as achievements. To correct the mistakes with which the public mind has thus been filled, Prof. Hugo Münsterberg has collected under the not too happily chosen title of "On the Witness Stand"* eight essays on psychology of the kind that deals with observable and measurable phenomena, and on the relations of that psychology to the detection and prevention of crime and the administration of justice under the law. Some of these essays have already had periodical publication, but they have now been revised, extended, and correlated in a way that largely increases both their value and their interest for the practical, as distinguished from the theorising, sociologist.

Experimental psychology, as Prof. Münsterberg studies, teaches, and uses it at Harvard, is pure science first, but it is applied science by a fast following second, and it threatens—no, promises—as soon as its already demonstrated potentialities reach the minds of Judges, jurors, and lawyers, to revolutionize court procedure and to bring light and order in domains where all, or almost all, is now darkness and confusion.

From time out of mind men have vaguely realized that mental operations have physical echoes; they have ascribed importance as evidence to pallor and blushes, to the trembling hand, the slowing and the hastening of the heart under the influence of emotion; they have suspected the fallibility of eyes and ears. But it has been a blind groping among the ill-comprehended, and therefore the inconclusive, and they still cling to the delusion that an honest witness necessarily can and always does tell the truth about things he has seen with his own eyes and heard with his own ears. Prof. Münsterberg's chapters on "Illusions" and "The Memory of the Witness" prove how grotesquely false this assumption is—what absurdly inaccurate judges of time, speed, and number, for instance, intelligent and veracious men can be and often are—how easy it is by leading questions and by suggestion not even approaching the hypnotic to make such men clearly remember and swear to non-existent things of which they think they have recent and direct knowledge.

Another chapter tells of the amazing discoveries that can be made by the simple device of repeating to a person suspected of having a guilty secret a long list of apparently chance-chosen words and noting what other word, and how quickly, falls from his lips after hearing each one on the list. Thus did Prof. Münsterberg convince himself, and we think will convince his readers, that Harry Orchard told the truth as nearly as a human being can tell it, and that his religion, though of a low, bargaining sort, is perfectly sincere. That the process used would, at this stage in the development of experimental psychology, warrant conviction of crime otherwise unproved, is not claimed, but its utility in estimating the weight of conflicting testimony is rendered unquestionable. On "Untrue Confessions" Prof. Münsterberg has much to say, and he shows that the law should be even more averse from permitting or acting on self-incrimination, with or without torture, than it is. Under sufficient pressure, adroitly applied, some men will confess anything—and believe the confession!

Of the use, conscious and unconscious, of suggestion in court, and of its effect on Judges and jurors as well as on witnesses, the author gives

INTELLIGENCE from St. Petersburg announces the completion of a new novel by Count Tolstoy. It is a work of supreme passion, of stormy and terrible scenes, the tale of a soul sworn to holiness successfully tempted to dreadful crime.

The title is "Father Sergius," and the subject is the life story of a guardsman, who, moving in the highest circles of St. Petersburg, is smitten with the charms of a brilliant society girl, offers her his heart and hand, and is made happy by a gracious acceptance. Subsequently, however, the bridegroom learns to his dismay that the lady is the mistress of a certain high-born personage. Disgusted with the world, the officer throws up his commission in the army, enters a monastery, takes the cowl, and assumes the name of Sergius. Here the bruised heart of the novice reposes in cloistral peace, and his soul, filled with the noble thoughts and spiritual influxes which language is powerless to express, and music only faintly suggests, gradually recovers sympathy with all creatures. Communing thus with the soul of the universe, the zealous monk thirsts for higher spiritual perfection, and finally, quitting the monastic family, retires to a lonely hermitage and sylvan meditation. Here he vies with the ancient anchorets in feats of self-mortification, followed by moods of ecstatic rapture, swellings of spirit, and consciousness of the godlike power within him. The fame of his holy life is bruited abroad, and peasants begin to speak of him with awe as a wonder-working saint. Nowhere in the book is Tolstoy's artistic power so marvelously displayed as in these conversations among peasants.

The second part of the novel opens with a description of a picnic arranged by youthful city pleasure-hunters, who, with the ladies of their hearts, are whirled along in three-in-hands, to the accompaniment of the horses, silvery bells, past the golden-domed monastery, past the sylvan recess in which the holy hermit is ever doing penance. They discuss his romantic story, his fierce love of self-inflicted suffering, his invulnerability to the shafts of temptation. One blithe and pretty lady is scornfully skeptical as to the monk's invulnerability, declares that she could easily entice him from his pedestal of sanctity, and have him at her feet if she wished. Her male companion, a lawyer, challenges her to make good her boast, offering a heavy wager that she will fail. The lady then descends alone from the three-in-hand, wanders along the fringe of the forest, and, profiting by a fall of fine rain, knocks at the door of the hermit's hut, entreating the inmate to give her temporary refuge.

The ensuing scenes of temptation are most artistic and powerful; for example, that in which, under the pretext of wet garments, the lady proceeds to change them, while Sergius, with throbbing heart and swimming head, feels the awakening of a passion that was not dead but sleeping, and, maddened by the fear lest it should, like an evil spirit, possess and sway him, he seizes a hatchet and chops off a finger. The fair temptress, horror-stricken, flees from the austere hermitage, shedding tears of shame as she departs.

Meanwhile, the fame of the holy man spreads over a wider area. Even the inhabitants of distant cities hear of the pious anchoret, who is endowed with holy powers and miraculous faculties. The sick and suffering are sent to him for physical healing and spiritual comfort.

Among others, a merchant takes his weak-minded daughter that the saintly man may intercede for her with God. The young, attractive maiden is then left in the cell of the anchoret, who has undertaken to offer prayer for her day and night, but on the very first evening the presence of the girl awakens desire within him. Sinful thoughts flit through his brain like an army of evil spirits. A terrible struggle ensues between the spirit and the flesh, culminating in the absolute victory of the latter.

Day dawns upon the fallen saint, upon the brutal criminal. His storm of sudden passion subsiding, the monk catches a fitful glimpse of the horror of the situation, and a second soul tempest follows the first, sweeping away the entire structure of spiritual perfection so laboriously built up during many years. A sentiment of deliberate blind, hatred springs up within him toward the girl there, who unwittingly caused his fall. In a mad outburst of rage Sergius clutches a hatchet—the same hatchet with which he formerly had chopped off a finger and conquered temptation. He swings it aloft and cleaves the skull of the wronged maiden. Having gazed long at the gory corpse Sergius quits the cell.

In the last scene we behold the long-bearded monk, with his hair floating in the wind, holding a pilgrim's staff in his hand and walking eastward aimlessly.

It is said that the subject of the novel was first suggested to the author sixteen years ago, when all orthodox Russia was publicly manifesting its veneration for a certain priest of the State Church whose reputation for holiness was widespread. It is also declared that "Father Sergius" will be published only after the author's death.

startling illustrations, some of which will be recognized as drawn from recent trials of great notoriety. Especially to be commended for attentive perusal is Prof. Münsterberg's discussion of hypnotism and its bearing on crime and therapeutics. These are subjects concerning which the public has recently been literally overwhelmed with gross and baleful misinformation, much of it from men who demand, and too often receive, recognition as authorities and experts. Prof. Münsterberg talks fact and common sense; he defines what can, and especially what can not, be done with hypnotism. Thus he performs a great and much-needed service—a service that ought to put many a pseudo-mystic out of business and rescue numberless dupes from the swindlers who are robbing and killing them.

LITERATURE FOR CHILDREN.

If there is a sentimental note to Mary E. Burt's introduction to her book, "Prose Every Child Should Know," (Doubleday, Page & Co., 90 cents,) the introduction is short, and every child will skip it. This sort of book is sought after with great eagerness by many persons, and certainly provides a fund of material for those recitations and school speeches which it is thought well to expect from the young. Other persons entertain an abiding hatred for these excerpts and morsels, arbitrarily named "best" or "indispensable" by some compiler. These can of course leave such a book alone. Each of these pieces is preceded by a shorter or longer introductory remark by the author, when the sentimentality goes trickling along, with a conscious cheerfulness probably deemed particularly salubrious when dealing with children. The authors quoted stretch from Plato to Dr. Van Dyke and beyond, and the book is graded to suit all ages.

Jack London as a Scientist.

Hereafter, whoever dares question the scientific accuracy of Jack London's stories will be met with the fact that a number of the latter have been adopted as text books in some of the colleges. This is true of "The Road" and "The People of the Abyss," both of which are used in courses of sociology. And now comes the news that "Before Adam," London's story of primitive man, has been chosen for required reading in Prof. A. G. Keller's course in Anthropology in Yale University. Prof. Keller makes the statement that this book is "in all essentials correct and scientific in its conception of early man."

Conan Doyle as an Essayist.

The creator of "Sherlock Holmes" appears in a new rôle, that of a writer of essays on books, literary tastes and experiences, in his new volume entitled "Through the Magic Door," which is to be published in this country by the McClure Company. Poe, Charles Reade, Scott, and Dumas are quoted as being among the author's favorites, and the reader is made to feel something of the outside influences that helped in the making of many of Conan Doyle's best stories.

ROYCE INSPECTS LOYALTY'S ETHICS

Harvard Professor Distinguishes Between the Principle of Devotion and Its Fortuitous Application.

By EDWARD A. DITHMAR.

PROF. ROYCE is no academic moralist arguing ethical questions from the point of view of the cultured recluse. He belongs, by choice, to the world of activity. The lesson of his new book is founded on his sure observation of the present tendencies of thought, and in it he reveals himself as the true patriot as well as the philosopher. The ethical value of loyalty needed discussion, especially as so much so-called loyalty is mere self-delusion. To be loyal in mere words, or negatively, to the shell of an outworn convention is not to be loyal at all, or wise. Moreover, true loyalty must express itself practically, in the way of a man's life, in his deeds. Cherished without reasoning, and to no really practical purpose, it avails nothing.

The drift of circumstances that may make a man of high and strong personal qualities a power for lasting good in a community, or develop him as a harmful influence to society, does not escape Prof. Royce's attention. The present significance of his book, therefore, is evident.

"The Philosophy of Loyalty" comprises the lectures delivered by Prof. Royce in 1907 before the Lowell Institute. He has lately been lecturing every week on the same subject at Yale. The author disclaims the idea of making a text book or an elaborately technical work of philosophical research. The appeal of the book is to all readers. Prof. Royce points out that the idea of loyalty—a precious word expressing an idea immeasurably more precious—is nearly always confused by its chance social and traditional associations. Few perceive it to be "the heart of all the virtues, the central duty among all duties."

Loyalty must be freed from its chance and misleading associations, and that is the new effort in the book. A familiar trait of this time is the tendency to revise tradition and to destroy what once seemed indispensable. This disposition affects not only social theory and religious belief but the exact sciences as well, though they can take care of themselves. All must endure the fire of criticism. It is no longer the flippant and vicious who are the most dangerous opponents of moral traditions, but the reformers and the prophets of a coming spiritual order. Thus our traditions regarding the rights of property are declared immoral, while family ties have been denounced, in the name of virtue, as essentially unworthy of the highest ideals. Accepting Nietzsche's doctrine of the "transmutation of all moral values," the individualists uphold the thesis that the conventional morality of the past was false in principle, a mere transition stage of evolution. These words are Prof. Royce's, briefly summarized.

In his lectures to the students, confining himself to a study of the practical aspects of moral law, Prof. Royce does not attempt to refute the perplexing reformers and prophets, but "to indicate some ways whereby we may clarify and simplify our moral situation." He believes that our traditional moral standards ought to be revised in many ways. We do well to seek both a new heaven and a new earth. He himself has spent his life in revising his opinions. But the traditions were often better in spirit than the fathers knew, and in revising them we may be able to see this latent better meaning in forms now antiquated. Revision, he declares, does not mean mere destruction.

Prof. Royce called his book "The Philosophy of Loyalty" after reading Dr. Steinmetz's "Philosophy of War." War and loyalty have been closely associated ideas. His desire is to consider loyalty first as an ethical principle. "Where loyalty seems to be a good, we are to see why; when what men consider loyalty leads them astray, we are to find wherein the fault lies." In loyalty, he urges, "when loyalty is properly defined, is the fulfillment of the whole moral law." A preliminary definition is "the willing and practical and thoroughgoing devotion of a person to a cause," such as the true patriot to his country, when he lives for it or dies for it; the ship Captain's to his ship. If one is to know his duty he must consult his own reasonable will:

But on the other hand if I merely look within myself to find what it is that I will, my own private individual nature, apart from due training, never gives me any answer to the question: What do I will? By nature I am a victim of my ancestry, a mass of world-old passions and impulses, desiring and suffering in constantly new ways as my circumstances change and as one or another of my natural impulses comes to the front. By nature, then, apart from a specific training, I have no personal will of my own. One of the principal tasks of my life is to learn to have a will of my own. To learn your own will—yes, to create your own will—is one of the largest of human undertakings.

Prof. Royce's subject is large, even for the limits of his book, and we cannot hope to present in a few hundred words a comprehensive summary of his ideas on "The Nature and Need of Loyalty," "Individualism"—the individualist is one who has "more rights than duties"—"Conscience," "Loyalty and Religion." There is much to be said on both sides of every question he discusses. Even individualism may be beneficent.

In the end Prof. Royce reaches a new definition of loyalty: "The will to believe in something eternal, and to express that belief in the practical life of a human being." Presented at the beginning of the argument, this might raise many objections. Skillfully and earnestly led up to, chapter by chapter, it carries conviction with it, and makes one comprehend how poor a thing much so-called loyalty is.

SOCRATES ON BRIDGE.

THE NEW PLATO: OR, SOCRATES REDIVIVUS. By Thomas L. Masson. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. 75 cents.

MR. TOM MASSON is one of our humorists who is not to be easily classified. You cannot line him up with Ade, Bangs, and J. L. Ford. He defies analysis, and his best sayings discourage quotation. People read him, and some have been seen to smile while reading him. This happens more frequently than most critics admit with humorous books, but then, some people smile easily and like to smile.

Mr. Masson's wit is subtle and his humor is elusive. But both pervade his writings and give them appreciable value. "The New Plato" treats of some later observations and teachings of Socrates in this very neighborhood. He discourses, with his ancient amiability and an occasional new twist of thought on married life, gambling and bridge playing, the theory and practice of Socialism, the tariff, and other topics of immediate interest. The book is readable and may be run through at a short sitting. Therefore it is worth while.

But to account for Mr. Masson is a harder task than to account for one of his books. He is here, and he belongs exclusively to the present hour. A multitude of his contemporaries like him. The quality of his genius may as well be left for posterity to determine. If posterity cannot spare the time, no harm will be done. Meanwhile, a humorous writer, with polite literary manners and a knack of pleasing, can get along very well without being classified.

A New Novel by Marion Crawford.

Since the "Saracinesca" series probably the most popular of his stories that Mr. Marion Crawford has written is "Fair Margaret." So popular has it been, in fact, that the demand for a sequel has been unceasing from the time of its appearance until now. Hence it will be welcome news to Mr. Crawford's admirers that the further career of the fair Margaret has been written, and will be published next week by The Macmillan Company. The new book has for its title "The Prima Donna," and takes up the story of Margaret Donne when she has become the greatest singer in the world. It is more truly an international novel than any other Mr. Crawford has written. Its scenes are enacted in the lobbies and behind the curtain of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, on the deck of an ocean liner, in English country houses, and the streets and drawing rooms of London. The characters represent seven different nationalities, and those who have read the novel say that it is many years since Mr. Crawford has written one with so big a theme, or with opportunities for such variety as to setting and plot.

MONCURE D. CONWAY LOVER OF TRUTH

The following article was written by Mr. Carnegie at the request of the Faculty of Dickinson College, who courteously permit its publication in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW.

By ANDREW CARNEGIE.

THE request of the Faculty of Dickinson College to say a few words in memory of my deeply lamented friend, Moncure D. Conway, cannot be resisted. We met first when he was in charge of a congregation near London, Bedford Park I think it was called. A day spent there by my mother and myself with Mr. and Mrs. Conway opened a friendship which ripened with the years. The more we knew of the man, and later the more we knew of his history, the greater our admiration grew. Taking his youth and surroundings, the strict tenets of theology in which he was nurtured, and the social system he was born to, it may be doubted if any man has passed through more varied phases of intellectual development than our friend, and certainly no man, that we have read of or have known, seems to have pursued the star-eyed Goddess of Truth more zealously or bowed to her revelations more conscientiously from stage to stage of his life than our lamented friend and mentor. Only two or three men of all whom I have known have followed Herbert Spencer's motto so strictly: "The highest truth a man sees, that he will fearlessly proclaim, knowing thereby that he will do his part best in the world."

I have often pictured Mr. Conway to myself saying to the Angel of Truth, "Lead on and I will follow." The closing paragraph from his autobiography shows the final step which led him to leave as a precious legacy his feelings upon the killing of man by man like wild beasts in battle:

"Implore peace, O my reader, from whom I now part. Implore peace not of deified thunderclouds but of every man, woman, child thou shalt meet. Do not merely offer the prayer, 'Give peace in our time,' but do thy part to answer it! Then, at least, though the world be at strife, there shall be peace in thee."

It was only last Summer that he came to us at Skibo Castle, in the Highlands of Scotland. All was new to him, what was best in the feudal system still remaining. The relations between the owners of the estate and their people sank deep into his heart. Everything seemed to please him—the piper marching around the castle in the morning, by whom he was awakened, the guests helping themselves at breakfast, the gillies, foresters, stables, hennery, dog kennels, gardens, garage, lawns, golf links, the salt water swimming pool, which he patronized, the falls of Shin, with the salmon leaping over; the moors and the heather—everything pertaining to life in the Highlands seemed to charm him more and more as each succeeding phase was revealed.

It chanced that the servants' ball took place when he was with us. I was prevented from attending. Mrs. Carnegie said to him laughingly that he would have to accompany her, an invitation to which he gladly responded. The tall, venerable, whitehaired, graceful, reverend old gentleman, taking my place, danced with the housekeeper, Mrs. Carnegie dancing with the butler in the same set. He went through all the intricacies of the Highland reel with becoming grace and evident enjoyment. The man of seventy-five years seemed like a young gallant. At a bound he had returned to the days of his youth.

Among our guests he soon took front rank as a living historian, the variety and accuracy of whose knowledge, and, more than all, of personal contact with so many of the great men who have passed away, soon secured him silent listeners. We were all greatly entertained. Not only the best known men of our own race, but his interviews with the leading men of the Far East, and not only our institutions and religion, but the religions of distant lands were illustrated; in short, he became the mentor among us. Just before he left, walking around the castle for the last time, he stopped and said to me: "This visit I consider the apotheosis of my career." This struck me forcibly, for solemnly it was said, but little did I dream that we were so soon to have the realization of this prophecy, and that when we reached New York his ashes were so soon to follow, and that Mrs. Carnegie and myself were to be called upon to attend the solemn and inspiring service conducted by the one living best fitted for the office, his dear friend, Dr. Collyer.

He has passed, but he has left behind him a precious legacy to all who were so fortunate as to be able to call him friend. They are better men and women because Moncure Conway has lived and entered into their lives. Let us follow his example. The rest is silence. A. C.

DEFINITIVE EDITION OF OSCAR WILDE.

NO apology for Oscar Wilde accompanies the new edition of his complete works, and none would avail. There are some who believe it would not be worth while to make such a fuss about this man if his writings were worthy to be ranked with those of Virgil and Horace. There are others, feverishly excitable persons, forever wailing over "man's inhumanity to man," (which has been a trifle overworked,) who hold in common with the editors of the new edition that Wilde is "the equal of the best authors in many fields," and that art is everything. Hence the "first complete, definitive edition of Wilde's works," in fifteen volumes, including novels and short stories, plays, miscellaneous prose works, and poems. The Anglo-American Authors' Association was formed expressly to collect these writings, many of which have not hitherto been collected, including letters and pamphlets highly prized by collectors.

The type, paper, printing, and binding are all that could be asked for in a definitive edition of any author. The photogravure illustrations include pictures by that other child of conspicuous and illuminated oblivion, Aubrey Beardsley, and others by Albert Henke, Clifton C. Phillips, J. R. Bacon, S. A. Moss, R. G. Vosburgh, C. A. Mente, N. Briganti, William Freeman, and Arthur W. Crisp. The edition appears in several forms. Each is named, and each copy numbered and registered. The autograph edition, containing genuine letters of Wilde and water color pictures and bound in French levant is lettered, and limited to twenty-six copies.

Richard Le Gallienne writes the introduction. He was a friend of Wilde, and is in literature his follower. The statements of fact and the dates can be relied on as accurate. The tone of the introduction is in keeping with the whole idea of the edition, a tone of laudation. This is right enough. If Wilde's works were to be collected and preserved it is well that the task should be performed by those who thoroughly believe in him. The uncommon literary facility of the man is not to be denied. He had imaginative power and the gift of melody. He did not understand his own era, or his place in the world, and he misrepresented both. He was sometimes the victim of self-deception, sometimes a deliberate poser and humbug. We are inclined to believe that no amount of sophistry, misdirected eloquence, mistaken enthusiasm can win for him a place among the great. But it is fair to say that some of the great in literature (such as Coleridge) failed utterly to retain the respect of their contemporaries.

THE STORY OF A LIFE.

The intimate and detailed account of the mental and spiritual development of a young man of Christian life and high ideals is to be found in "A Life With a Purpose," by Henry B. Wright, (Fleming H. Revell Company, $1.50.) The book is a memorial to John Lawrence Thurston, who, at the very beginning of his career as a missionary in China, was ordered home on account of ill health and soon died of consumption. The volume has been prepared by many hands of relatives, friends, and associates. All who knew him intimately contributed of their knowledge. Beginning with his childhood, his life is portrayed and the development of his character is traced with the utmost detail by means of his own letters and diaries and the reminiscences of his friends. The result is like a photograph of the soul. As a human document the volume is of interest to all who value such intimate studies of mind and spirit as well as for those who care for the work in which he was engaged.

UPTON SINCLAIR DEFENDS HIMSELF

Writes Letter Telling How Much He Knows About "Society" and How He Learned It All.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I HAVE been spending the Winter in Bermuda, where the newspapers are slow in coming. A friend has sent me a copy of your indignant review of "The Metropolis." It seems to have given him a great deal of pain; he quotes your argument that I cannot write a picture of society because I am not a member of society, and asks if one must be a hippopotamus in order to write a study of the habits of hippopotami. The argument seems to me to be sufficiently cogent to be worth bringing to your attention. It reminds me of Dr. Johnson's famous saying, "Who drives fat oxen must himself be fat."

I am aware of the fact that in advancing this argument you have the prejudices of the crowd with you. It is a delusion carefully fostered by society itself. There is supposed to be something particularly exalted about it, some atmosphere of grandeur to which a common man cannot penetrate. And, of course, when I venture to set forth a doubt that any such atmosphere really exists I am open to the charge that I have had no opportunity of finding it.

The question seems to me a sufficiently interesting one to be worth discussing, if you will grant me the space. What are my qualifications for making a picture of society? In the first place, what your reviewer probably never dreamed of, I was myself brought up in society, and spent all my early life in its atmosphere. I trust that I may mention the fact, simply as a fact. I am not at all proud of it, I think, and I try hard not even to be proud of my lack of pride. My father's father was a United States naval officer, and was prominent in Virginia society. My mother's family was prominent in the affairs of a Southern city which makes considerable of a social splurge. I have still aunts and cousins of many degrees who are in society in that city; at any rate, whenever they give balls or get married the newspapers have columns about it. When I lived there I was too young to be invited about, but I was not too young to hear the conversations at the dinner table, and to hear the accounts of the balls and the parties on the morning after. The atmosphere of mammonism which I came thus to know filled me with a revulsion which you may find (somewhat solemnly set forth) in the first novel which I ever published, "King Midas," written when I was nineteen.

But the society of the metropolis? How did I find out about it? The difficulties which you expound in your review were in my mind from the very beginning. It is very easy to meet a stock yards laborer in his home; it is not so easy to meet a captain of industry or a society dame. I had, of course, many opportunities of getting into touch with social life in underground ways. Among the Socialists in New York I knew a man who offered to smuggle me on board of a yacht in Newport. I knew another, a manager of theatrical entertainments, who offered to dress me up and take me into many Fifth Avenue mansions. I knew several others who offered to introduce me to waiters and servants. I was, perhaps, overfastidious, but I found myself feeling about these propositions as I felt in Chicago when I was invited to witness a prizefight in the stock yards. I did not go. From first to last I have never, in gathering material for any of my books, pretended to be anything that I was not or gotten any information from any person who did not know just what I got it for. So far as "The Metropolis" is concerned, I have never had a word to say to a servant, except such words as one ordinarily has to say to servants.

I chose a much more obvious way of getting my material, so obvious, perhaps, that few would have thought of it. I sat down and wrote personal letters to the people I wished to meet. I told them frankly just what I intended to do, and I said that I should like to make their acquaintance. I said that I had talked with many people in getting material for my work, and that I had never violated a confidence, nor dropped the remotest hint as to the source of my information. I said that I would like to meet them privately and explain my purposes to them. In about three-fourths of the cases the result of this was that I met the person I wanted to meet. In the case of society people I told them what I wanted to know and what I wanted to see. The information that they gave me was commonly about other people, but of course one cannot express one's views about other people without at the same time giving a view of one's own character. So far as the leaders of our business and finance are concerned, I found them for the most part quite willing to admit me to the inside of their mental machinery, save only when it came to the special details of their own money-getting, about which, of course, I cared nothing. As a Socialist, possessing a scientific understanding of industrial evolution, I am able to talk with our "captains of industry" in their own language. I understand the necessity for industrial combination, even when reactionary laws and dishonest politicians stand in the way. So I can enter into the point of view of a man like Mr. Ryan or Mr. Harriman.

You suggest that my pictures of club life in "The Metropolis" have been drawn from the cafés. Again, please understand, I am simply recording a fact: I have lived in New York City off and on for eighteen years, and in that time I have been in just exactly one café. I do not know the taste of liquor, and I have never smoked tobacco, nor even drunk a cup of coffee. Living as a solitary student and hack-writer in lodging house garrets, I have been in and out and around the Tenderloin a good deal, but I never even realized what it was until a couple of years ago, when I began my study of the life of New York. My one experience with a café was when I sat in one directly opposite the Times Building with a Central Office man, who spent several hours in pointing out to me amusing types of Tenderloin character. As to the clubs, I have at various times been a guest of the Authors, the Players, the Century, the Union League, the Lotos, and the Metropolitan. It would seem, therefore, that I would be more apt to portray the cafés from my knowledge of the clubs than the clubs from my knowledge of the cafés.

You indict my pictures of metropolitan high life on the score of exaggeration. This is, of course, an easy charge to bring and difficult to refute. You brought it, you may recall, in the case of "The Jungle," and there was a rather severe test made of your fairness. The last thing that I had prepared for when I wrote "The Jungle" was a Presidential investigation of its accuracy, and I confess that I was rather startled when I found myself thus put to the test, but I managed to put into the hands of the President's commission documentary evidence of many of the things that I had stated, and I brought forward a number of workmen to testify to other statements. I believe that I succeeded in satisfying the President's representatives that "The Jungle" was a true picture of the stock yards. As I recall it, the only point upon which I definitely "fell down" was in my statement that men had occasionally fallen into the tanks and been rendered into lard. The commission required legal proof on this point, and the best that my representatives were able to do was to find three or four cases where the evidence had been destroyed by the burial of the man and the bribing and frightening of his family—and in one case the transporting of them bodily to parts unknown.

Now, I do not anticipate being called upon officially to prove what I have stated in "The Metropolis." I think, however, that if that were to happen, I could make as good a showing. So far as the prices are concerned, which your reviewer and many others question, they have only to follow in my footsteps among the dealers, and more especially among the bills which the husband of one of our great society dames gave me the privilege of inspecting. I have brought down no end of ridicule upon my head by describing a man as paying $800 a week for an apartment in a New York hotel. I can take any one who wants to be taken to half a dozen exclusive establishments in New York City where he can pay $1,000 a week, and where he can find a number of other people who are paying as much. I know of one or two places where he cannot even get rates quoted to him unless he belongs to the particular select circle to which the concern caters.

Your reviewer accuses me of making up my book from newspaper yarns. There are in "The Metropolis" several enumerations of amusing and fantastic freaks of rich people. Several of these items were gathered from newspapers, but so far as 95 per cent. of the contents of the book is concerned, it has come directly from the lips of persons who themselves have taken part in what they described, and I should say that 60 per cent. of it I have seen with my own eyes. You indict in particular my description of a "topsy-turvy lunch" in a Long Island roadhouse, and ask if I ever sat down to such an affair. I did. The roadhouse in question, however, was not on Long Island, but near New Rochelle. A similar banquet was described to me by a member of the Supreme Court of New York State, who sat down to it in the apartment of one of our Western millionaires, and I know of three or four other cases of this particular kind of fantasticality.

You indict me for the frequency of my sneers, and for the cynicism of my attitude to "big business" in New York. As a matter of fact, I fear that everywhere in which I speak in my own person I manifest my tendency to be gravely didactic; for what my characters say, of course, I am not responsible. I might say, however, that their most cynical discussions about business are literally transcriptions from the lips of a gentleman who has been one of the half dozen highest paid corporation lawyers in the metropolis. The stories, manners, and conversations of "Major Venable" are also taken down literally, word for word, with that old gentleman's amused consent.

To close this long letter, your reviewer says, "What does Mr. Sinclair know about fashionable New York society?" Mr. Sinclair would like to reply, with all due respect and in all sincerity, "What does your reviewer know about fashionable New York society?" Mr. Sinclair has given two years of his life to an elaborate and thorough study of it. Has your reviewer done the same, or anything approaching it? Does he content himself with the opinion of his own particular friends, who have permitted themselves to take society at its own valuation? Or does he, perchance, move in some one of the twenty or thirty different groups which consider themselves society, and reckon out of consideration all other groups and all things which have not happened to come to his own particular pair of ears? You ask for a picture of New York fashionable society written by a member of it. Members of society very seldom write. Of course, if society's own view is correct—if society is a noble and excellent institution—then its opinion of itself is a matter of supreme importance. If, on the other hand, my view is correct, if the thing called society is a disease, a parasite upon the social body, and a peril to the safety of the Republic, then it seems to me a self-evident proposition that no one who has been "in" society—who is capable of so far losing his health, and surrendering his dignity as to take part in this kind of activity, or to surrender himself to these conventions—can by any possibility be capable of making a worth-while report of what society is. A disease cannot diagnose itself; and when one has cancer he looks about for a competent physician and not for a person who has had cancer all his life.

UPTON SINCLAIR.

Endfield, Somerset, Bermuda, April 15.

"MY ENEMY THE MOTOR."

A tale of horror, "in eight honks and one crash," is the one told by Julian Street in a quaintly illustrated little volume bearing the title, "My Enemy the Motor," (the John Lane Company.) With the first honk one feels the crash coming, and when it does come one is quite ready to share the author's animosity toward the motor, not because it is a motor, but because in the hands of the benighted enthusiast it can become an instrument of such prolonged and variegated torture. In this particular tale the Grand Duke, ably assisted by a mechanician called Louis, plays the part of fate to his hapless guests, the Actor, the Doctor, and the Author, until the final crash sets his victims free. The Grand Duke sounds somewhat mediaeval, terrific; but the title is one given by force of circumstances to a personage who is in reality no more harmless or vindictive than a prosperous American business man on a vacation in Europe But in pursuance of the vacation idea this Grand Duke, aided by a motor, of course, succeeds in spreading quite as much destruction, at least among the geese, cows, and other innocent ornaments of the roads leading out of Paris, as the most ferocious ducal tyrant of old. Mr. Street's story is a lively one and told in the breezy fashion that goes well somehow with an American motor hastening to its doom along the highways of France and England. Moreover, there are certain little incidents connected with speeding and the consequent tangle with the law that have a familiar sound to the American motorist, and will be welcomed by him as showing how these things are managed in Europe.

The Church in the Cure of Disease.

Judged by the literature that has already appeared and that is forthcoming, the interest in the effect of mind in the cure of disease is steadily growing in the Church. Its most prominent phase, of course, is known as the Emmanuel Church movement. Emanating from Boston, it is apparently making itself felt in other churches. Thus Dr. Robert Macdonald of the Washington Avenue Church, Brooklyn, has taken up the question with considerable enthusiasm, preached a series of sermons on it, and finally has written a book on it which will be published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company in the early Fall. The title of the book is "Mind, Religion, and Health: An Exposition of the Emmanuel Movement, What It Is and How Its Principles Can Be Applied in the Cure of Disease and to Our Everyday Life." Two previous publications, which are extensively quoted by Dr. Macdonald and form something of an authoritative basis for his work, are "The Psychical Treatment of Nervous Diseases," by Dr. Du Bois, and "The Force of Mind, or the Mental Factor in Medicine," by Dr. Alfred Schofield.

There is already a great demand among the people of Dr. Macdonald's church for a clinic similar to the one held in connection with Emmanuel Church in Boston, and it is expected that this demand will be satisfied in the Fall simultaneously with the publication of "Mind, Religion, and Health."

A. C. Benson's Schoolmaster in America.

"The Schoolmaster" is the title of a book by Arthur Christopher Benson, which will be brought out in an American edition by the Putnams next month. It is not a scientific treatise on education, but is filled with practical suggestions that come out of the author's long experience as a teacher in an English public school. The book, of course, was written some time ago and published in England, and of the influences from which it was evolved Mr. Benson gives the following bit of autobiographical reminiscence in an introduction written for the forthcoming American edition:

I was for seven years an Eton boy, and for three years I was at King's College, Cambridge, which is a sister foundation of Eton, and was, in my day at all events, penetrated by Eton associations and traditions. I lived, so to speak, in an Eton inclosure, and mainly in the Eton set, and then I went back to Eton as a master and remained there in that capacity for nearly twenty years. It was a very full and active life, but it did not give one much opportunity of extending one's educational horizon. What wonder if in this book I assumed, not pretentiously, I trust, a somewhat definite standpoint, and if my acquired and habitual bias failed in the wider sympathies?

FROM DUTTON'S SPRING LIST.

The Symbolist Movement in Literature
By ARTHUR SYMONS. Net $2.00.

There is no other critic so well equipped as Mr. Symons to explain and interpret for us the group of modern writers who have sought to free literature from the bonds of a materialistic tradition, abandoning description that beauty may be suggested and evoked. The book treats chiefly of the French Symbolists, from de Nerval to Maeterlinck, with interesting chapters on Verlaine, Mallarmé and the Huysmans.

Reminiscences of Oxford
By REV. W. TUCKWELL, M. A.

With many half-tone illustrations from old prints and portraits. Net $2.00.

Gossip is always entertaining and it becomes dignified and important when, as in the present volume, its subjects are exalted personages in the intellectual world. These Reminiscences begin in the Thirties, when railroads and the penny post were novelties, and cover the entire Victorian period, not systematically but with judicious selection of the persons and events which the author can present most intimately and brilliantly to the reader. A feature of the book is an appendix made up of those characteristic skits in prose and verse which are among the most amusing incidents of college life.

Fifty Years of Modern Painting
Corot to Sargent. By J. E. PHYTHIAN. Author of "G. F. Watts."

With 8 illustrations in color and 32 in half-tone. Price $3.50 net.

A critical review of modern art from the birth of Pre-Raphaelitism to the present. No other work covers the ground so comprehensively and so compactly.

Aspects of George Meredith
By RICHARD H. P. CURLE.

With an engraved portrait after G. F. WATTS, R. A. $2.00 net.

"I would advise any aspirant to the study of Meredith to read a book by Mr. Richard Curle, very recently published, entitled Aspects of George Meredith. It is the work of a convinced and penetrating admirer, and analyzes a number of points highly deserving of being taken into consideration."—Mr. W. M. Rossetti in The Daily News.

A Walking Gentleman
By JAMES PRIOR. $1.50.

"'The Walking Gentleman' is the pure type of the Gentleman Vagabond who takes to the road from no better reason than the promptings of an inborn instinct. . . . The story not only has a clever theme, well handled, but, better yet, it is delightfully written."—Bookman.

BOSTON GOSSIP OF LATEST BOOKS

New Kind of "Problem" Book —W. S. Braithwaite's Second Volume of Verse—"Little Colonel" Once More.

BOSTON, April 24.—Mr. Harrison Rhodes's "The Adventures of Charles Edward," which Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. announce for next month, is of the new species of "problem book." It presents to the reader no question in morals or manners, but the author sets himself a problem or series of problems in effecting the impossible with a certain set of figures under certain conditions. In the first chapter of this story, for instance, the reader is shown how a young American staying in London fulfils his promise to give a compatriot a dinner with distinguished Londoners and beautiful English women, not one of whom knows the host, and not one of whom he knows. The reader is informed of his intention, and has an opportunity to plan how he would effect such a feat, before the author shows him how it really was performed. Englishmen who read will say "no one but an American could do such things." Americans will omit the second, third, and fourth words. The book is to have twenty-four full-page illustrations by Penrhyn Stanlaws.

The position of general designer of books and bindings at the Riverside Press, formerly held by the late Mr. Philip Mason, will henceforth be filled by Miss L. Averill Cole, a pupil of Jacobs of Brussels. She studied in the good, thorough German fashion eight hours daily for three years. She won the first prize at the international exhibition in Brussels and was regarded with great approbation in the Berlin and London schools, in which she acquired her general education. Here is one young American girl who seems to have lived abroad to some purpose.

The latest "part" of Prof. Sargent's "Trees and Shrubs" contained descriptions of six new thorns and one newly discovered tree of American growth, and now another tree has been found at Shreveport, La., by Prof. R. S. Cocks of Tulane University. Prof. Sargent has examined it and declares it to be of the locust species. The next "part" will appear May 9.

Mr. William Stanley Braithwaite's "Lyrics of Life and Love," published three years ago, won more attention than is ordinarily given to verse by new writers, and made him many friends among the elder authors and reviewers, who found him untouched by the wandering fancies of the moment, yet evidently aware of all important currents of thought. He did not allow himself to be hurried into the production of a second book, and it is only now that Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. announce his "The House of the Falling Leaves, with Other Poems." Its first edition is to be 1,500 copies, a rather large number for verse not advertised by previous publication. A cover with curious Japanese design will be the dress of the volume.

The question as to whether there shall or shall not be a "Little Colonel" book for the holidays is settled, and one might almost say that it is written, for the central allegory about which Mrs. Johnston arranges all her stories is completed and already the characters are going through their pretty play on her study table. Mary Ware is the heroine, as was expected, and so the chief question of the season in the juvenile department at Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.'s is happily settled.

Miss Florence J. Lewis's "Climbing Up to Nature" will probably be issued by the C. M. Clark Company next week, and although it has many of the imperfections of a first novel, it introduces two characters of the species in which the average woman delights, and of which she talks long after she forgets the half dozen great heroines about whom she studied in school. One is a half crazy old maid whose mind, to use her own phrases, "runs contrary" and "switches her off," the other, a housewife with a genius for bringing all her neighbors into embarrassing positions. The two live in McCormack's Circle, a group of humble homes into which a young girl brings light and refreshment through the media of books and flowers, and the habit of viewing the world from the roof rather than from the ground. The story has the air of being written with an eye to dramatization, and probably it was, as the heroine is announced as reflecting the character of a certain young actress.

Miss Harriet C. Morse's "A Cowboy Cavalier" will follow this book in about a week.

Mr. W. A. Butterfield hoped that Mr. Walter Eliot Thwing's "History of the First Church in Roxbury, 1603-1904," would be published by Feb. 1, but the subscribers' copies were not ready until last Saturday, by which time it was evident that the edition would hardly suffice for the first demand. The church occupies a unique position, for those most prone to sneer at the Puritan of popular conception are touched by the unique figure of "Apostle" Eliot, and the pastors have been remarkable men. The book is dedicated to the author's father, Deacon Supply Clap Thwing, an extraordinary man.

Mrs. Humphry, the latest English singer of imprecatory psalms against Americans, she who finds rich American women brutal and avaricious, was not always thus. She is "Madge" of Truth, and when she wrote "Manners for Women" she talked of the slender grace and languorous ease with which certain Americans curtseyed at her Majesty's drawing room, and spoke most graciously of American influence as having led to the profuse employment of flowers in decoration. And now the rich Americans are brutal and avaricious.

LITERARY NEWS OF PHILADELPHIA

Story of an Amusing Rascal About to Appear—London "Best-Seller" to Have American Edition.

PHILADELPHIA, April 24.—"Get Rich Quick Wallington," by George Randolph Chester, is an important Philadelphia publication this week. The date of issue for this book had been set for last week, but the advance orders were so large that the publishers, the Henry Altemus Company, decided to postpone it. Two editions were disposed of before the day of publication, and a third printing is now being run off.

"The Blue Lagoon," by H. De Vere Stackpoole, the best selling novel in London at the present time, is to be brought out in this country at once by the J. B. Lippincott Company. This seems to be in truth, as one critic has said, "a story which is unlike any other story that ever was written." It is the tale of two children, a boy and a girl, of Boston, who are cast away on a desert island in the South Seas with only an old Irish sailor, Paddy Button, as a companion. The sailor soon dies, and they are brought face to face with death. They confront the problems and experiences of life one by one, the sense of love, parentage, and all the rest. The idea is original, and it has been worked out very successfully. Mr. Stackpoole says:

"Nature had indeed opened her doors to these children. One might have fancied her in an experimental mood, saying: 'Let me put these buds of civilization back into my nursery and see what they will become—how they will blossom and what will be the end of it all.'"

A theme that Dr. Mitchell made intensely interesting—the conflict between conscience and patriotism in a Revolutionary Quaker—is also the motive in Mrs. Lucy Foster Madison's "Peggy Owen," a book for girls, announced for publication this year by the Penn Publishing Company. Peggy came of a Philadelphia Quaker family, which numbered among its friends Benjamin Franklin, Betsy Ross, and some other figures prominent in history. The accuracy of Mrs. Madison's historical stories is well known. She gives in this book a very intimate picture of the feverish activity and mental unrest that stirred the good people of Philadelphia during the Revolution. Some of Mrs. Madison's characterizations of the Quakers of that period, their love of colors and finery, for instance, are likely to be questioned, but she is prepared to quote some excellent authorities in her defense.

The John C. Winston Company has nearly ready for issue, and will publish in the near future, an entirely new "Encyclopedia of Quotations," by William S. Walsh, the author of several standard literary reference books. An interesting feature of this book is the fact that it will be sold at a lower price than other similar books. The book will be printed and bound as a 12mo. for handy use, and a limited number of copies will be taken from the press on thin Bible paper.

Lippincotts are issuing this week two novels which have been previously announced, "The Master Influence," by Thomas McKean, and "In the Dead of Night," by John T. McIntyre.

Senator Albert J. Beveridge's book, "Work and Habits," is on the presses of the Henry Altemus Company and will be issued early in May.

The fourth volume of "Great American Lawyers" is published by the John C. Winston Company this week. This work, which is edited by William Draper Lewis, Dean of the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania, will be complete in eight volumes.

The John C. Winston Company is adding to its long list of standard books new illustrated editions, printed on thin Bible paper and bound in limp leather, of Hugo's "Les Misérables," Carlyle's "French Revolution," Blackmore's "Lorna Doone," Eliot's "Romola," Macaulay's "History of England," and Plutarch's "Lives." These books will be published in a series called "The Ideal Classics."

The same house has in hand a manuscript by the Rev. Frank T. Lee of Washburn College, Topeka, Kan., called "Side Lights of the Bible," in which is presented a large amount of information on the geography, customs, and history of Bible lands and people, designed for the use of Sunday school teachers, scholars, and other students of the Scriptures. The author made a favorable impression with his "Bible Study Popularized" a few years ago, and has also written a book on "Luke as a Literary Man."

Two new volumes are appearing this Spring in Lippincott's Educational Series. This is edited by Martin G. Brumbaugh, Superintendent of the schools of Philadelphia. The new books are "The Educational Process," by Arthur Cary Fleshman, Professor of Pedagogy in the State University at Lexington, Ky., and "The Study of Nature," by Samuel C. Schmucker, who holds the Chair of Biology at the West Chester (Penn.) State Normal School.

The George W. Jacobs Company has in hand ready for early publication a biography of Thomas Jonathan (usually called Stonewall) Jackson. This will be the eleventh volume in their American Crisis Series. The author is Dr. Henry Alexander White, for many years Professor of History at Washington and Lee University, though now a resident of Columbia, S. C. He is the author of "The Life of Robert E. Lee," in Putnam's Heroes of the Nations Series, and other standard works.

BEST BOOKS.

Is "Daniel Deronda" the best book of George Eliot? That seems to be the opinion of Mr. Addison Ballard of Pittsfield, who contributes to The Springfield Republican some significant comments on authorship. People who are interested in literature, and especially in the higher forms of fiction, are accustomed to hearing many strange estimates of the relative value of books, and to making them. We have heard "Daniel Deronda" derided; we have heard it condemned with faint praise. Its reception by the professional critics was far from enthusiastic. Following "Middlemarch," it seemed to them disappointing. The London Saturday Review's first impression was that "the author is ever driving at something foreign to his (the reader's) habits of thought. The leading persons—those with whom her (the author's) sympathies lie—are guided by interests and motives with which he has never come in contact."

Prof. Dowden, writing of "Daniel Deronda" in his admirable "Studies in Literature," recognizes this remoteness of its subject in criticising its critics. He can easily understand why some critics have found the hero detestable, while others have found him incredible. "In walking from their lodgings to their clubs they have not exhausted the geography of the habitable globe." The Nation, of New York, found in those days (the late seventies) that "the sense of dissatisfaction with the result of 'Daniel Deronda' has its source in something deeper than the peculiarities of the story. The reader feels that there is something disappointing in the development of George Eliot's genius." The careful Spectator of London declared that no other book of George Eliot's had appeared so labored, "sometimes so forced and feeble in its incidental remarks," and no other book of hers contained so little humor.

We fancied that these representative opinions stood. In the long interval since the publication of the book any authoritative reversal of them that may have been agreed to has escaped our notice. Yet Mr. Ballard's high opinion of "Daniel Deronda," based obviously on his own reading of it, and not on hearsay, is certainly interesting and not unimportant. There must be many who think as he does.

In the current number of The London Academy Mr. Arthur Machen makes a similar statement almost as astonishing. He declares that Thomas Hardy's best book is "Two in a Tower." A timid critic might hesitate to so discriminate, but "Two in a Tower" has always been highly appraised. We remember with amusement that it was accounted grossly immoral when it first appeared here, serially. The point of view has changed. Hardy is no longer considered immoral, even by the Philistines. The charge was always unjust. But if compelled to decide which of Hardy's novels should be accounted number one in merit our choice might waver between "The Return of the Native" and "Far from the Madding Crowd."

We do not remember whether it is Andrew Lang or Robert Louis Stevenson who likes best "Great Expectations" of all Dickens's novels. Many of us retain a strong liking for that highly fanciful story. A certain freshness of inspiration, missing in its two rather weightier predecessors, "Bleak House" and "Little Dorrit," gives it uncommon charm. Joe Gargery and Wopsle, Uncle Pumblechook and Trabb's boy, Wemmick and the Aged, and the tremendous power of the scene of Magwitch's return more than atone for the sentimentality involved in the romance of Estella, the utter impossibility of Miss Havisham, and, worst of all, the toy bogey character of Dolge Orlick. There is certainly nothing in the book as hopelessly banal as Lady Dedlock's preposterous flight and the later adventures of Edith Dombey. But with "Pickwick" and "David Copperfield" in mind, few would care to call "Great Expectations" a best book.

Still these differences of opinion about the relative merits of books form not one of the penalties, but one of the prizes of authorship. The people who think "Barry Lyndon" Thackeray's best work, "The Fortune of Nigel" Scott's best, serve a good and wholesome purpose in literary criticism. They ought to be welcomed to the forum.

AN ARTIST'S STORY OF THE NAVY

Zogbaum draws with a pencil,
And I do things with a pen, wrote Kipling. But Mr. Zogbaum comes forward with the proof that he also can "do things with a pen." His novel, "The Junior Officer of the Watch," (D. Appleton & Co., $1.50,) is a well-written tale of life aboard ship on an American cruiser, and also in several other places. The main part of the action takes place on board ship and on leave ashore at Lisbon and Gibraltar. The hero, a handsome and manly young midshipman, is supposed to be drowned, but is picked up by an English yacht, which carries the owner and his pretty daughter. They have several exciting adventures, in the course of which the American saves the lives of his rescuers, and he finally gets back to his own ship to find himself the victim of a charge of peculation. It is the pretty daughter of the yacht owner who finally is able to help him prove his innocence. The plot is very neatly woven together, and the portrayal of life on ship and on shore is realistic and interesting. The book is illustrated by the author.

POOR SOCIETY NOVEL.

"Katharine Trevalyan," by Louise Maunsell Field (The McClure Company), is a society novel which should be more interesting than it is. It has plenty of flesh-and-blood characters, and an easy style, but it falls short of absorbing the attention; and it is also much too long. Its antipathetic personages, the scoundrelly Verondee and the cold-blooded Mrs. Dacre, are drawn with more conviction and vitality than the rather priggish hero and heroine.

DRIFT OF LONDON LITERARY GOSSIP

Plans of the Castles; How They Collaborate—Allen Raine's Strange Popularity — Life of Tolstoy.

LONDON, April 17.—Agnes and Egerton Castle have chosen for their next book the title "Diamond Cut Paste." This story, Mr. Castle tells me, is a modern comedy-novel, and will appear first serially and then in book form next year. "It is light, and does for the twentieth century what 'The Bath Comedy' did for the eighteenth."

Mr. and Mrs. Castle furnish an example of how, in present-day literary conditions, wise authors find it desirable to do their work far in advance of the time of publication, and to have their books planned out three or four deep before any one of them is published. Besides the comedy-novel, the Castles have ready another book called "A Garden Enclosed," which will not be printed till 1910. The title for this book is taken from the Song of Solomon. The book itself will again be modern—Mr. and Mrs. Castle appear for the time to have deserted the swords and patches they handle so competently—and will be of a more serious order than "Diamond Cut Paste."

Besides this, Mr. and Mrs. Castle are interested in the dramatization of several of their old books. Mr. Castle is preparing a new version of "The Pride of Jennico" with Capt. Basil Hood, in which Miss Evelyn Millard is to appear, while before long clever little Miss Ward is to appear in London in a play founded on "The Secret Orchard."

Speaking of the Castles, who are probably the most successful among the pairs of authors who write together, awakens the question, How do people collaborate? I suppose everybody who has ever tried to write anything has wondered how two people set about to write together, and has thought that it must be a very difficult proceeding indeed. I asked a London publisher the other day what he supposed was the process of collaboration.

"Well," said he with a laugh, "this is how some people collaborate," and he read me a passage from a letter which, by a coincidence, he had received on the very morning when I put my question to him.

"'I wish it to be understood,' said this letter which had been sent the publisher by one of the joint authors of a weighty book he had agreed to publish, 'that I am in no way responsible for Mr. So-and-So's [his collaborator's] work, as I have never seen a word he has written.'"

"That's one way to do it!" commented the publisher.

It is unnecessary to say that such is not Mr. and Mrs. Castle's way. Mr. Castle gave me an idea of how he and Mrs. Castle conducted their collaboration.

"It's a process of writing that is possible only between man and wife," said he. "Two friends might collaborate successfully in the writing of one or two books, but after a time there would be sure to be a divergence of interests that would spoil the partnership. In the case of husband and wife this divergence does not occur."

It is Mr. Castle, I understand, who does the actual writing, but every point as it comes up is discussed between the two of them, and Mr. and Mrs. Castle map out every detail of the whole story together before the writing is begun. Mr. Castle is enthusiastic about the advantages of the arrangement.

"For one thing, we get on so much faster than a single writer could. We keep one another interested and at work. In short," said he, "it's a case of two pens with but a single thought, two heads that write as one!"

Perhaps "Allen Raine," the Welsh novelist, has never been heard of in America. I have not yet found out whether her books are issued in the United States. At any rate, she may be counted one of the miracles among authors in England. Some figures quoted in the front of her latest novel, a story called "Neither Storehouse Nor Barn," state that the sales of her six previous books have reached a total of one and three-quarters millions of copies, and that one book alone sold 315,000. Such a sale as this is, in England, where the prevalence of circulating libraries and the comparative smallness of the country combine to keep the number of copies sold considerably below the American average of sales, really remarkable.

I have just been reading "Neither Storehouse Nor Barn," and trying to fathom the secret of "Allen Raine's" success. But apparently her secret, like truth, lies at the bottom of a very deep well, for I can see no possible reason why nearly two million persons should have wished to buy her books. Judging from the present specimen, they are not very interesting. They are not sensational, and they are entirely proper. Furthermore, I have scarcely ever met any one who acknowledged to have read any of them. Where, then, are her million and three-quarters of admirers?

The papers have been full lately with items relating to Tolstoy's eightieth birthday, which will take place in the early Autumn, and with a discussion of the various plans for celebrating it. Projects have been suggested for celebrating it by the issuing of cheap editions of his books, by the staging of some of his plays, or by a pilgrimage to Tolstoy's birthplace, Yasnaya Polyana, on the part of his admirers. Finally an announcement has been made that Tolstoy himself, though pleased at the attention, repudiates altogether the idea of any public demonstration. Just what will happen in the end no one appears to know.

Meantime, Mr. Aylmer Maude, who is one of the foremost authorities in England on Tolstoy and his works, has written to tell me about a project of his own which will serve after a fashion to celebrate the birthday, and will, moreover, be a literary event of considerable importance. This is the publication in two volumes of a life of Tolstoy.

"I hope to have it ready by the Autumn," says Mr. Maude. "The first volume, dealing with his university experiences, adventures in the Caucasus, the part he played in the Crimean war, his life in St. Petersburg and relations with Tourgeneff, his travels in Western Europe, his attitude toward the Emancipation, and his educational activities in the early sixties, as well as the first years of his married life, is nearly ready."

This will, so far as I know, be the most important English book yet written on Tolstoy. Mr. Maude has already published a little biographical sketch of him, about which Tolstoy himself said: "I very much approve of it. It is admirably constructed, and what is most important is given."

The English educational authorities, who seem to have, on the subject of what young folk should or should not read, ideas of such absurdity that it is difficult to believe the newspaper reports of their proceedings, have just met with a defeat. One of their recent pronouncements has encountered such a burst of ridicule that it has been abandoned. It was to the effect that Jane Austen's "Sense and Sensibility" was "unsuitable for students under 18 years of age"! GALBRAITH.

"Foundations of Modern Europe."

Since the year 1756 what are the main facts and tendencies that have helped to bring about the present state of European politics and civilization? Dr. Emil Reich, in a book called "Foundations of Modern Europe," published this week by the Macmillan Company, finds the answer in the War of American Independence, to which he devotes one chapter, to the French Revolution, sufficiently important for two chapters, and Napoleon, whose career and historical influence is described in four chapters. The "Reaction," the "Revolutions," the "Unity of Italy," the "Unity of Germany," and the "Franco-German War" furnish Dr. Reich with other milestones in the evolution of European civilization as it appears to-day.

Bishop Potter on "Modernism."

G. P. Putnam's Sons, the publishers of "The Programme of Modernism," have received the following letter from the Right Rev. Dr. Henry C. Potter:

You have made me much your debtor by sending me the volume on "Modernism" which came with your note yesterday.

I took the book with me in the train on my way to a visitation at Peekskill, and am profoundly impressed with the cogency, timeliness, and grasp of the introduction. We are certainly standing on the eve of great changes in beliefs, and in our recognitions of the beliefs of peoples whom we have long been wont to dismiss to the darkness of paganism.

Meantime, such a version of the Encyclical, and such a discussion of it, will be of enormous value.

MODERN MORALITY BY CHAS. KENNEDY

"The Servant in the House" Issued in Book Form — A Strong and Original Play.

By EDWARD CARY.

AMERICANS are not accustomed to reading the plays they go, or may go, to see, and it is from the stage alone that the dramatist must usually make his appeal to them. He cannot, as his French confrère can, add to his audience the numbers, often far greater, of those whom he reaches by the printed page. He cannot hope for the peculiar kind and degree of appreciation which reading produces, or count upon the reinforcement of the impression made from the stage by that received from reading, and, perhaps, from study, if he is fortunate enough to inspire the desire for study. There are advantages and the contrary in the custom of publication, but on the whole, for the dramatist whose aims are not entirely superficial, the advantages are the more numerous.

Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, the English playwright and scholar, whose play, "The Servant in the House," has for some weeks been produced before constantly increasing audiences by the Henry Miller Associate Players, clearly comes within this condition, and the publication of the work by Harper & Brothers will doubtless add to the interest so widely manifested in it. In the book, even more than in the play, the spirit of grave, though cheerful, challenge on the part of the author is emphatically shown. It is all the more clearly shown because it is not so continually and obviously modified by the element of comedy skilfully interwoven in the stage presentation. The element of comedy is there, of course, but it does not flash so gayly through nearly every scene as on the stage, nor do Mr. Kennedy's frankly humorous remarks under the guise of stage directions supply the laughter-compelling influence. The ingenuity of the manufacturer of effects forces itself pleasantly on the attention. The reader realises that what he is reading is meant to be heard from living persons and accompanied by living action. He realises, too, that the movement of the piece is conducted with sustained energy, and that at every station, if the word may be pardoned, the dénouement is brought nearer and the interest in it intensified without any indiscreet anticipation or revelation of it. But to the reader it is especially the thesis of the drama, the idea and sentiment of it, that enlist and hold the attention.

The sentiment of the play is plain. It is pretty fully expressed in a part of the citation from the Gospel of John, which the author adopts as one of his mottoes: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." The idea of the drama is not so easily defined. In the main it is the embodiment of the spirit of Christ in a modern person, set amid modern surroundings, in conflict or co-operation with men and women of to-day, actuated by the desires and betrayed by the temptations of our ordinary modern life. The person in which this spirit is sought to be embodied cannot be said to be the "hero" of the play, for it is one of its most striking features that there is no "hero," that every part in the drama has an essential importance, and that the importance of all save one is practically of the same degree. This fact aids greatly in the integrity of the impression produced. It also makes analysis more difficult. The play has very frankly a "purpose" and a "moral." It presents them indeed with something of the naïve earnestness and insistence of the old "moralities," such as "Everyman," in which Mr. Kennedy took, very appropriately, the rôle of "The Doctor." In "The Servant in the House" he is unashamedly a preacher, or, rather, a minister, whose consecrated mission it is to expose and denounce sin and call to repentance. But there are no "abstractions" in his play. Everything is boldly and baldly concrete. For every sin there is a sinner in the flesh, and—an essential compensation and accompaniment — for righteousness, for the love that is righteousness, there are human beings capable of practicing it under needed inspiration, and one person in whom it is expressly embodied, "The Servant."

The character of "The Servant," though unfailingly impressive on the stage, is a little puzzling to the reader. He not only embodies the spirit of Christ; in some rather striking and conspicuous details he seems to personify Him. There is attributed to him knowledge not humanly explicable. He can see when his back is turned. We are told that "his face is one of awful sweetness, dignity, and strength," and that "there is the calm of a great mastery about him, suited to his habit as a servant." At one point Mr. Kennedy puts into italics "The Servant's" imperious demand: "Make me lord and master of this house for one little hour." These are indications of a conception of "The Servant" as personifying the Saviour. In the opening pages there is the definite suggestion, though veiled, of "reincarnation." As has been intimated, the precise purpose and limitations of this absolutely essential character in the play remain a little puzzling, and to that extent a little unsatisfying to the reader.

There is nothing obscure or unsatisfying in the spirit of the play. This at every point is high and pure and beautiful. The reader may have the feeling that the one unredeemed and unrelieved rascal of the play is too hopelessly cast out, but one is made also to feel that the fate visited on him is in harmony with the scourging of the money changers from the temple and with a few other sublime instances in the Christian Scriptures of wrath unquenchable toward certain degrees and kinds of offense. In reading the play, even more than in watching it, the skill and vigor of its construction come out. The individuality of each of the characters, the complete consistency of each, their steady development, the mutual efficiency with which they interact, these are elements of remarkable gift on the part of the dramatist. For the writer there is the sense of real gratitude for the singularly pure and nervous English he employs. In his hands it is a highly evolved instrument adapted to various uses and adequate to each.

SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE.

Mr. Clouston in his introduction to the volume on Sir Thomas Lawrence in the Newnes Art Library Series, (Frederick Warne & Co., $1.25,) says that it is doubtful whether the time has yet arrived when a critical and unbiased judgment of Lawrence's art is possible. "To us, apart from art," he continues, "his style is neither new nor old; it is simply hackneyed through the vast number of inferior painters who copied his easier qualities." He bids us remember that when Lawrence made the style it was absolutely new, and he discusses at some length the disadvantages of the costume of the age in which the artist produced his portraits. This is unstable ground for a critic of art to stand upon, as we all realise when we call to mind the fashions encountered by Velasquez and Goya, to say nothing of those in vogue in Dürer's time and country. That Lawrence heralds a long decline in the art of portrait painting in England is hardly to be contested; his technical and temperamental limitations were serious, and added to these were an education and initiation probably the worst to be obtained. When he was barely five years old, his biographer states, his father discovered that in him he held a trump card. A story is quoted concerning the boy's precocity, which has appeared frequently and which throws a strong light on the temptations of his childhood. He was asked if he could draw a portrait of Mr. Kenyon, who, with his wife, was stopping at the inn kept by the elder Lawrence. "That I can, and very like, too," was his modest reply, but he succeeded in making good his boast, then, asked to draw a portrait of Mrs. Kenyon, he requested her to turn her side-face toward him, as her features were not straight. Self-confidence and a knack of choosing the best view in posing his sitters are qualities which Lawrence continued to exhibit throughout his commercially prosperous career.

Although he was not a great artist, he was an indefatigable worker, and his execution became remarkably facile with his vast practice. His early talents were run on a commercial basis, and later he made honest sacrifices for the support of an apparently spendthrift family, his father having an irresponsible attitude toward his paternal obligations and a cheerful willingness to profit by the talents of his son. That these talents might have been raised to a much higher level of efficiency by the training refused to them is extremely probable.

Lawrence's pictures are not improved in reproduction, but the forty-eight illustrations in the present volume give a fair idea of his range and of his style in composition.

GOSSIP ABOUT AUTHORS.

AMELIE RIVES, the Princess Troubetzkoy, is at present living in her Virginia home, having recently returned from a Winter's sojourn in Italy. Harper & Brothers expect to publish a novel by her this Spring.

Justus Miles Forman is among the authors who take early leave of New York before the Summer season. Having finished another new novel he will sail next week for a vacation abroad.

Hugh Pendexter is another short-story writer to enter the field of the playwright. Within the next fortnight he will, as co-author, produce a four-act comedy on New England life which is said to have some of the popular country flavor of "Shore Acres" and plays of similar character.

Herbert Casson, whose "Romance of the Reaper" is among the day's publications, followed as a boy one of the first twine self-binders in this country. That was some thirty years ago, when young Casson lived in the frontier villages of the far North and West and had little knowledge of any life except that of the farm and the forest.

Mr. Edgar Jepson, author of "Tangled Wedlock," is another writer of the day whose youthful experiences have undoubtedly helped him in the art of the romancer. In a little tin pot of a steam yacht he and two of his college friends, in order to "see the world," coasted along the shores of the Mediterranean and in six months had as many narrow escapes from drowning as the average seaman enjoys in thirty years. Then came a year as schoolmaster in a primitive Welsh village, and after that three years in the West Indies—from all of which, quite naturally, was accumulated enough experience for the demands of romance.

Mr. Romeyn Beck Hough, A. B., author of "The Handbook of the Trees of the Northern States and Canada East of the Rocky Mountains," comes by his knowledge of forestry quite naturally, since his father was the first Forest Commissioner appointed in this country. "American Woods" is the title of another of his books.

William Allen White, the Kansas editor, has been spending a fortnight in New York. Before that he was in Washington, where he was entertained by President Roosevelt. Mr. White has devoted himself to various lines of literature, but particularly to character sketches, one of which, appearing in next month's issue of The American Magazine, pictures Secretary Taft as "A Hewer of Wood."

Cale Young Rice, who has just made his third venture as a poetic dramatist in "Yolanda of Cyprus," a tragedy in five acts, is traveling a somewhat anomalous road for a poet. He has just been appointed to an executive position in a bank which he has been instrumental in forming in Louisville. He has, however, at least one excellent example of distinction achieved in the dual rôle of poet-banker in this country.

J. C. Smith, author of "William Jordan Junior," if he continues at his present rate of productivity in fiction, will deserve to rank with some of those writers, like Sir Walter Scott, whose fertility has been classed as phenomenal. Mr. Smith is only thirty years old and devotes much of his time to cricket, football, and hockey, in which he has already gained an excellent name. Nevertheless, he has found time to write no less than nine novels, four of which have been published in this country. And Sir Walter Scott was forty-three before his first novel was written.

The identity of the author of "As the Hague Ordains: Journal of a Russian Prisoner's Wife in Japan," has been revealed. Miss Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore, a resident of Washington, a prominent member of the National Geographic Society, is now acknowledged to be the writer of the book. Of course, Miss Scidmore, who is the author of a number of standard books of travel, was in Japan during the war and drew her material from fact and her illustrations from actual people.

Although the Secretary of State for India has been raised to the peerage, it is the plain, familiar name John Morley that appears on the title page of the new two-volume edition of his "Life of Richard Cobden." Evidently Mr. Morley regards his literary as something quite apart from his political career and is not to be disturbed by the chance titles acquired by the latter.

Robert Herrick on Married Life.

A new book by Robert Herrick, entitled "Together," is promised for this Spring. It is a story that concerns itself with the lives of married people and contains a goodly variety of scenes and character. It is also said to introduce Mr. Herrick to his readers in a much more personal and intimate manner of writing than heretofore.

THE MAY MAGAZINES.

No Lack of Reminiscences in the Current Monthlies, Nor of Science —Beginning of a Serial by William J. Locke—Posthumous Article by Mr. Stedman—A Charming Essay.

IN Harper's Magazine for May, Robert K. Duncan, who is said to be Professor of Industrial Chemistry at the University of Kansas, but who writes like a poet, discourses on "The Whitherward of Matter." It is a story of the transmutation of the elements, romantic in the extreme, but scarcely so sober and qualified in statement as to convince the layman of its scientific reliability. Harper's contains, among an unusual amount of fiction, one very distressing story, "Her Last Day," the excuse for the publication of which is hard to imagine, and another, "A Daughter's Heart," of exceptionally lovely character.

In The American Magazine begins what is apparently to be a romance by William J. Locke. The author of "The Beloved Vagabond" has in "Simple Septimus" created a personage who is bound to endear himself to a multitude of readers. In the first installment of the story the characters already reach a situation full of large possibilities. Mr. Dooley, Ray Stannard Baker, Josephine Daskam Bacon, and Madeleine Doty are among other contributors.

The initial number of Scribner's is an article on "Mountain Climbing," by a practical cragsman; the illustrations are the best part of this feature. John Fox's best novel, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," continues to run, and Arthur Ruhl draws an astonishing picture of Buenos Ayres.

In McClure's the best features are supplied by the serials—the life of Mrs. Eddy and the reminiscences of Carl Schurz and of Ellen Terry.

The best thing in The Atlantic is the little essay by Lucy Martin Donnelly, who complains of the decade of finery. It is full of the pomp of brocades, Median silks, "costly cloth of massy gold," peacock feathers, muffs and perukes, capes, fichus, crinolines, powder bags, Gainsboroughs, chapeaux à Creneaux, sleeves Amadis, sleeves à la Mameluck, plumes à le gentilhomme, and the like delightful fopperies. But the Atlantic is otherwise full of serious subjects unusually well discussed.

The Century publishes this month an article which will attract attention—one, namely, by the late Edmund Clarence Stedman, in which he discusses aerial navigation as a menace, particularly to British supremacy. Prof. Lowell writes with unusual fullness of his Martian theories, and the late Dr. Shrady is represented in an article giving reminiscences of the last days of Gen. Grant. Lady Randolph Churchill's reminiscences progress, and an article by the late Mme. Therersé Blanc describes the French Académie Française, the Académie des Goncourt, and the Committee of Women of "La Vie Heureuse." Fiction and illustrations are unusually good.

EXCELLENT ROMANCE.

The very name of Bath rouses echoes of romance and adventure, women fairer than any we know raise powdered heads above the dust of time, quaint oaths and a clash of swords ring on the inner ear. And this story by Elizabeth Ellis, "The Fair Moon of Bath," (Dodd, Mead & Co., $1.50,) will fulfill all the name implies. Plenty of fighting, suspicions ill-founded enough but hard to clear up, love and sorrow and joy, a "demme" or two on every page, villains and heroes, the Prince over the water, and plotters galore, with lost papers that puzzle the reader almost as much and as long as they do the characters of the story. The book is an excellent specimen of its sort, lightly and daintily written, with verve and taste to attract any one who likes work well done, aside from the mere story interest.

ISRAEL'S PROPHETS AFTER THE EXILE.

THE RELIGION OF THE POST-EXILIC PROPHETS. By W. H. Bennett, Litt. D., D. D. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.

DR. BENNETT'S new book on "The Religion of the Post-Exilic Prophets" is the first of a new series of ten volumes on "The Literature and Religion of Israel," to be edited by Dr. James Hastings. The author is a biblical student of high rank and a Professor of Old Testament Exegis. He treats here of Ezekiel and his successors, the first of the Scribes, and the makers of the Torah. The book is neither exclusively doctrinal nor controversial, and if not touched by the spirit of the higher criticism tries at least to be in keeping with the development of scholarship. Primarily designed, of course, for students of the Bible of theological inclinations, it is not a work to be overlooked by men of culture interested in its subject.

The period covered in this volume is from the reputed fall of Jerusalem in 586 B. C. to some time after 300 B. C. Jeremiah, however, whose ministry is supposed to have lasted later than the earlier date, is not accounted one of the post-exilic prophets. The first of them is Ezekiel.

Dr. Bennett notes that there was a community of Jews in Babylon several years before the fall of Jerusalem. The beginning of the exile is not a definite point of time. Nevertheless the religion of the Jews in the early days of the exile was substantially the religion of ancient Israel during the reign of the last Kings of Judah. All men, broadly speaking, were religious. There were no "free-thinkers." The general worship of Yahweh, however, existed side by side with a great variety of faith and practice, though many paid occasional visits to the shrines of Baal, the Sun, and the Queen of Heaven, "just as the English Protestant may attend the Established Church in the morning and a Baptist Chapel in the afternoon." This seems a broad admission for an English Protestant clergyman, considering the relative character of the worship at a shrine of Baal and in a Baptist Chapel.

For most men devotion to Yahweh was quite consistent with a secondary recognition of other gods. Toward the close of the monarchy this "electicism" broadened. Yahweh was often identified with Moloch or Milcom. Manasser worshipped the Host of Heaven. Incense was burned to Baal and the planets. Women wept for Tammuz, and Ezekiel describes seventy elders worshipping wall pictures of creeping things and abominable beasts. To many Dr. Bennett says, Yahweh seemed discredited and moribund.

The true religion of Israel was rescued and revivified by the new race of prophets, the representatives of Abraham and Moses. With Ezekiel, Heggai, Joel, Zecharriah, Ezra, Obadiah, and Malachi came the prophetic faith in the restoration of the chosen people, the Messianic tradition, the development of the idea of atonement.

UP-TO-DATE ADVENTURE.

Those who believe that the days of pirates are over and that the commonplace spirit of modernism has banished them forever from the high seas should read "The Sixth Speed," by E. J. Rath, (Moffatt, Yard & Co.) It is the story of a really delightful person, one Sanderson, who starts as a chauffeur, becomes an inventor of a phenomenally fast motorboat, developes into a thoroughly attractive pirate and robber of seafarers in general and millionaires in particular, and finally ends with a calcium light upon him and a nation acclaiming him as a hero and a patriot.

These little incongruities are merged in a most enjoyable tale of adventure, full of action and interest. If Sanderson did not threaten, at the "curtain," to be so completely reformed, we would dare to hope for more of his picturesque villianies in the future.

A New Guide to Ibsen.

Still another of the season's books is to be devoted to the Norwegian author. "Henrik Ibsen: The Man and His Plays," is the title of a book by Montrose J. Moses, which will be published in June by Mitchell Kennerley, and which, it is hoped, will serve a practical purpose that has been more or less lacking in some of the elaborate studies of the Norwegian dramatist which have recently appeared. The forthcoming book contains interpretations of all the Ibsen plays in a biographical setting, indicating the motive which impelled the writing of each. A good deal of space will be given to a study of the construction of the plays, an analysis of the Ibsen dramatis personae, together with a complete stage history of the Ibsen drama. In other words, the author will attempt to place before his readers a practical guide to Ibsen.

HARPERS BOOKS

The Barrier

By Rex Beach

It's 100 per cent. novel—no problem, no preaching, no politics—just a big, daring love story of Alaska. The critics say it is even better than "The Spoilers." THE BARRIER is the one novel that everybody will read this summer—and in the promise of a surfeit of politics such a diverting story is refreshing.

King Spruce

By Holman Day

Life means strife in the tempestuous woods of Maine when a young man matches his strength against that of the lumber barons—to win the daughter of their chief. This new novel is a sweeping, healthy story of a fight for love in the romantic realm where pine trees are king,

The Servant in the House

By Charles Rann Kennedy

We do not publish plays—but here is a drama so great, so compelling, so reverent, so akin to all the beautiful and permanent things in life that it is more than a novel, more than a mere book. According to the critics, "Not in a lifetime has such a wonderful play been created"—and—it reads as well as it acts.

Purple and Homespun

By Samuel M. Gardenhire

In this brilliant story, a self-made man and Senator sighs for the heart of the daughter of an ambassador. The reader soon suspects that there is a serious bar, and the mystery makes a big story.

Bertrand of Brittany

By Warwick Deeping

A dashing tale of knights, tourneys, chivalry, adventure and heroism. The manhood of Bertrand and his unselfish love, the nobility of Tiphaine and her simple faith, soften a story that is wild adventure.

"The American Nation," that great 27 vol. History, is just completed after seven years of scholarly work. A Booklet telling of it is yours for the asking.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

JOHNSON BRIGHAM.—Catharine M. Sedgwick, in a letter to Fitz-Greene Halleck in 1831, asks Halleck, if he happen to know either good or evil of a Mr. Snelling, author of a poem called "The Fair Maid of Iowa." I find in Halleck's correspondence no answer to the inquiry. Can you throw any light upon the poet or the poem in question?

It is probable that the author was William Joseph Snelling, a contributor to various periodicals, and to "The Boston Book," a 12mo, which was published in 1837. He died at Chelsea, Mass., in 1848. He wrote "Polar Regions of the Western Continent Explored," 1831; "Truth: A New Year's Gift for Scribblers; a Satirical Poem," 1832, and possibly "Tales of the Northwest." One of his poems, "The Birth of Thunder," is published in Griswold's "Poets and Poetry of America." We do not find mention in the early book catalogues of "The Fair Maid of Iowa." The London Athenaeum of June 2, 1838, in a mildly satirical review of "The Boston Book," says:

"We must mention the name of Snelling, recently an editor, we hear, but of old a regular hunter and trapper among the Indians in the wilderness of the Northwest for many years. What a diversity of style must we look for in a book made up by such contributors; and it is motley and racy indeed. Snelling writes with a sort of savage energy. He is famed for some tomahawk kind of satire, we are told, and we should think as much. He wields his sharp, relentless words with no great grace, indeed, but with a sort of barbarous dexterity and ghastly glee. 'The Night in the Woods' is very funny, and yet not so neither. One is afraid to laugh as he reads it. Yet Snelling writes well in his way. He cannot help doing so. He appears to us a man of a truculent genius, desperately ill-disciplined."

JOHN D. ROSS.—In volume III., Page 102, of Gebbie's Burns (Philadelphia, 1886. Six volumes) is a footnote regarding Miss Jeanie Jaffrey, a young lady immortalized by the poet as "The Blue-Eyed Lassie." She married a Mr. Renwick, and afterward settled in New York. Gebbie says: "Washington Irving was proud of her friendship and society, and after her death in October, 1850, her memoirs were published, along with a collected volume of her writings."

Can you advise me if such a volume was really published, and if so where can I consult or obtain a copy?

Miss Jeffrey—so the name seems to be spelled—was the pretty daughter of a clergyman of Lochmaben, Scotland. During one of the visits by Burns to her father's house, she did the honors of the table. Burns presented to her at breakfast his song, known as "The Blue-Eyed Lassie." She is also the subject of his song beginning:

"When first I saw fair Jeanie's face,
I couldna tell what ailed me,
My heart went fluttering pit-a-pat,
My een they almost failed me."

She married a resident of New York named Renwick. They had a son James, physicist, contributor to various magazines and author of a number of works; Henry Brevoort, engineer; James, architect, and Edward Sabine, inventor. Henry B. and James died in 1895. We believe that Edward S., born 1823, is still living.

We find no mention of memoirs or writing of Mrs. Renwick in book catalogues of 1850-60.

H. W. L.—Kindly inform me through THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS the value of the following-named books: "Dialogues of the Dead," by Lord (George) Lyttelton; first American edition, from the fifth London edition; printed at Worcester, Mass., by Thomas, Son & Thomas, April 1797. "Essay on Irish Bulls," by Richard Lovel Edgeworth and Maria Edgeworth, New York, 1803. "The English Reader, or Pieces in Prose and Verse from the Best Writers," by Lindley Murray, 1829.

None of these works seems to have special value. The "Dialogues of the Dead" appeared first in 1760. An edition issued thirty-seven years after the original publication can hardly be expected to have special value unless there should be something unusual about it.

"Irish Bulls," the Edgeworth book, was published first in 1802. The 1803 edition might have slight special value as an early nineteenth century New York item, but we doubt it.

The first edition of Lindley Murray's "English Reader" was published at York, England, in 1799. There have been many editions of it here and in England. Its popularity has been so great that a late edition of it, such as the one named by our correspondent, is a cheap book.

SAMUEL A. RITCHIE—Am I correct in thinking that Whittier is the poet referred to as the "Good Gray Poet"? Who is the author of this designation?

Walt Whitman, not John G. Whittier, is the poet to whom that term is applied. William D. O'Connor, a friend, admirer, and champion of Whitman, wrote "The Good Gray Poet: A Vindication." It was published in this city in 1886. O'Connor was a native of Boston, Mass. At the age of 20 he became editor of The Boston Commonwealth, a Free Soil paper, and in 1859-60 was an editor of The Philadelphia Evening Post. For many years he performed clerical work for the United States Government. He wrote "Harrington," a forceful romance, 1860; "The Ghost," a story, in 1867, and "Hamlet's Note Book," 1886, in which he took extreme Baconian ground as to the authorship of the Shakespeare dramas. He also wrote poems, notable among which are "To Athos" and "To Fanny." His short tales, "What Cheer" and "The Carpenter," are well written. In 1882 a series of articles by him was published denouncing the attempt in Boston to suppress Whitman's "Leaves of Grass." His impassioned pamphlet, "The Good Gray Poet," shows O'Connor's familiarity with the world's best literature, and also his fearlessness in expressing his views on the Whitman question. O'Connor died in Washington, D. C., May 9, 1889, in his fifty-seventh year.

Answers from Readers.

MADISON.—When the old Brooklyn Theatre was running under the management of the Conways, and Frank Roche was the idol of Brooklyn's emotional youths, "Led Astray" always played to "standing room only."

To-day, probably, Frank Roche would be called awfully stagey—but I can hear him now, as he repeated the lines regarding which "C. D. S." takes issue with you in attributing them to "Led Astray," though you are entirely correct in so doing.

It is many years now since I saw "Led Astray" played, and my memory may be faulty, but I think the proper reading of those lines is as follows:

"There is another life I long to meet,
Without which life my life is incomplete;
Oh, sweeter self, like me art thou astray,
Trying (or striving) with all thy heart to find the way to mine;
Striving (or trying) like mine to find the breast

W. H. C.—Relative to inquiry in last week's supplement for

This couplet is found in "Farm Festivals," by Will Carleton, published by Harper & Brothers, in a rather long poem entitled "The First Settler's Story." I give below its immediate setting:

"That speech—it hadn't been gone half a minute
Before I saw the cold, black poison in it;
And I'd have given all I had, and more,
To 've safely got it back in-door.
I'm now what most folks 'well-to-do' would call:
I feel to-day as if I'd give it all,
Provided I through fifty years might reach
And kill and bury that half-minute speech.
You can't do that way when you're flying words.
Things that we think may sometimes fall back dead;
But God Himself can't kill them when they're said."

J. H. HIRST.—In answer to "A. S." his quotation seems to be adapted from the thirteenth chapter, Book I., of Thomas a Kempis's "Imitation of Christ": "For at the first there comes to the mind simply a thought, then a strong imagination, after that the feeling of pleasure, then an evil motion, then consent, and so by degrees the malignant enemy gains full possession, because he was not resisted at the beginning."

E. W. P.—I notice in your column "Answers from Readers" of the issue of the 21st a paragraph upon "The Gingerbread Boy," answered by Dorothy B. Leonard. It struck me that possibly your first correspondent upon this subject might be searching for a small volume which was written a number of years ago by "G. H. P.," entitled "The Gingerbread Man," whose adventures are somewhat similar to those quoted in the paragraph of to-day's issue. This little book is still in print and can be obtained at G. P. Putnam's Sons, in this city.

E. W. KNOWLTON, Watertown, N. Y.—An inquiry from "M. E. B." may refer to "The House I Live In," of which I quote you a few lines. There is more of it, and if this is what is wanted, if "M. E. B." chooses to communicate with me, I can furnish what I presume is the whole of it. It is simply dated "West Newton, Mass., W. I. N." You will notice in place of "The windows, too, were dim," the original says: "Light through the window panes is dim."

THE HOUSE I LIVE IN.

"The house I live in has grown old,
Some parts of it are in decay.
The thatch upon the roof, once black,
Is nearly now all turned to gray.
Light through the window panes is dim,
So that I cannot clearly see;
Two new ones I have now outside,
Have been a wondrous help to me."

M. B. D.—A correspondent lately asked for the author of a poem in which occurs the following lines:

"And the winds told
Many a wondrous story
Of friends long gone
To the kingdom above
Where the soul wears

They are by Marion Harland, (Mrs. Terhune,) and can be found in one of her earliest novels called "The Hidden Path."

A. E. M.—In your issue of Feb. 29 "A. S." asks the author's name of a certain saying—not quite correctly quoted. It is by the Right Rev. A. C. A. Hall of Vermont, and should read as follows:

"We sow our thoughts, and we reap our actions; we sow our actions, and we reap our habits; we sow our habits, and we reap our characters; we sow our characters, and we reap our destiny."

K. H.—The little poem from "The Son of the Desert," by F. Halm, has been very badly treated by its translators. May I venture to offer another attempt, which gives the whole of it?

"My heart I prithee answer,
How are Love's marvels wrought?
Two hearts with one pulse beating,
Two spirits and one thought.

"Now tell me how Love cometh?
'Tis here, unsought, unsent;
Canst tell me how Love goeth?
That was not Love which went."

WILLIAM WADE.—It is quite likely that the work on "Atlantis" Mrs. Sylvia R. Warnick (Feb. 15) has heard of is one very much later than Donnelly's, by some author of recent date, probably still living, but I cannot remember name of author or book, except that the second title of the book was something like "The Lost Continent." Phoronice was Empress of Atlantis, Deucalion was the hero, mammoths, small, cloven-footed horses and other now extinct animals were features. "Our Lord the Sun" was the deity, Atlantis was completely submerged in punishment of Phoronice's wickedness. Deucalion and his wife Nais (?) escaping the "The Ark of the Mysteries."

If any reader can give me the name of the work I will be much obliged.

QUEEN VICTORIA AS A WOMAN.

While it is manifestly impossible to strip a Queen of her crown and consider her only as a woman, Frank Hird has succeeded admirably in his effort to write about Queen Victoria merely as an individual, in his book, "Victoria, the Woman" (D. Appleton & Co., $2.50). He explains in his preface that his endeavor has been "to show the Queen as a daughter, a wife, a woman, a friend, a sovereign," and that he does not pretend to have written a complete life of Queen Victoria, nor even a complete study of her character. Nevertheless, he has succeeded in giving a distinct view of her important traits. He does not touch at all upon political events or conditions except when it has been necessary in order to explain some phase of her character. It is throughout the woman and not the Queen of whom he writes—the woman, with her warm heart, her intense affections, her domesticity, her plain good sense, and her level-headedness. His work is surprisingly judicial in its tone, for he tells about Victoria's faults and foibles as calmly as he points out her good qualities. He has made extensive use of the Queen's letters and diaries, which he quotes at great length. Some of the letters which he uses have never before been published.

A CONGRESSMAN'S LOVE AFFAIR.

The feminine novel of Washington affairs always represents members of Congress as spending most of their time at dinners, receptions, and other social diversions. Now and then one of them deserts his duties as a squire of dames long enough to deliver a stirring speech, which rouses the whole country, and then saunters back to his proper position as a drawing room attaché. Mary Imlay Taylor has studied society in the capital carefully enough to know just why Congressmen are sent to Washington and what they do there, and in her latest novel, "The Reaping" (Little, Brown & Co.), she adheres conscientiously to the feminine-novel traditions as to a Congressman's reason for existence. Her hero, William Fox, is so assiduous in the performance of his drawing-room duties that one wonders when he gets the time to prepare the brilliant speeches of which an echo now and then floats through the pages. The theme of the book is the passion of a lovely and erratic young woman who has married for his money and position a wealthy man who, at the beginning of the story, has been made Secretary of the Navy, for the brilliant young Congressman. It takes its title from the harvest which she reaps for her selfishness, egotism, and frivolity.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF NEW YORK BOOKS

Good Proportion of the Season's Forthcoming Publications Devoted to Summer Occupations.

THE following books are published to-day by G. P. Putnam's Sons: "The Journal of the Constitutional Convention of 1787," by James Madison, edited with introduction and notes by Gaillard Hunt, two volumes, uniform with Lodge's edition of "The Federalist"; "The Sayings of Jesus," an attempt to determine the source from which Matthew and Luke drew their information, and to estimate its value in relation to the Gospel of St. Mark, by Prof. Adolf Harnack of the University of Berlin, translated by the Rev. J. R. Wilkinson, M. A.; "Reminiscences of Eight Parliaments," by Henry W. Lucy, the "Toby, M. P.," of Punch; a reprint of Margaret Vere Farrington's "Fra Lippo Lippi," being the story of the life of this noted Italian painter of the fifteenth century, with photogravure illustrations, and "Heredity," by J. Arthur Thomson, M. A., Professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen, postponed from last Saturday.

Next month Henry Holt & Co. expect to publish "The Quest of the Unseen," by Prof. Oscar Kuhns of Wesleyan, author of "Dante and the English Poets," &c. A book to be issued next week is the sixth volume of the American Nature Series, entitled "North American Trees," by Nathaniel Lord Britton, Director in Chief of the New York Botanical Garden, assisted by John A. Shafer, custodian of the museums of the New York Botanical Garden. The book contains some 775 illustrations, and describes all the kinds of trees known to grow independently of cultivation north of the West Indies and Mexico.

Books published this week by Funk & Wagnalls are as follows: "The Sanitary Question Box," a handy guide to the essentials of sanitation and ventilation in the home, by Charles F. Wingate, consulting sanitary engineer; "Manikin Chart of the Human System," an overlapping flat model showing the different parts of the human anatomy in their natural colors, and a new and revised edition of "The Friends' Hymnal," approved and officially adopted by the Society of Friends.

The following books are published this week by the Macmillan Company: "The Prima Donna," by F. Marion Crawford; "Milan," in the Mediaeval Towns Series; "Highways and Byways of Hampshire," by D. H. Moutray Read, illustrated by Arthur B. Conner; "Life of Cobden," by John Morley, in the Eversley Edition; "Processes of Instruction," being Vol. II. of "Principles of Secondary Education," by Prof. Charles De Garmo; "Nursing the Insane," by Dr. Clara Barrus; "The Management of a City School," by Arthur J. Perry; "The Structure of the Cotton Fibre," by H. H. Bowman; "A Plant Book for Schools," by Otto V. Darbishire; "Landmarks of British Fiscal History," by J. Saxon Mills; "The Diary of John Evelyn," in the Globe Library; "Four Plays of Aeschylus," translated into English verse by E. D. A. Morshead, in the Golden Treasury Series; Seyffert's "Dictionary of Antiquities," abridged by Dr. Emil Reich in the New Classical Library, and "Leonardo da Vinci," by R. H. Hobart Cust, in the Miniature Series of Painters.

The fifteenth century morality play, "Everyman," in which Miss Matthison took the title rôle and Charles Rann Kennedy the part of the doctor four years ago, will be published by Mitchell Kennerley during the next two weeks. The book will contain an introduction by Montrose J. Moses giving a full account of the origin and history of the morality and miracle plays.

The first book of "The Song Series" will be published in the first week of May by A. S. Barnes & Co. The book is by Alys E. Bentley, Director of Music, Washington, D. C., and contains eighty songs, more than half of them new, and never before published, besides thirty-four exercises for the development of rhythm and tonality.

The following are published to-day by the McClure Company: "By Wild Waves Tossed," a novel of the sea by Capt. Jack Brand, U. S. N., author of "The Free Lances"; "Retz," an unhistorical novel, by Van Zo Post, and "The Postcript," a story the scene of which is laid in Italy, by Eleanor Stuart.

Early in May Harper & Brothers expect to publish in book form the two novels, which have been appearing in a serial competition this year, entitled, respectively, "The Shoulders of Atlas," by Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman, and "Sir Richard Escombe," by Max Pemberton. Also a book by Charles A. Conant, author of "Principles of Money and Banking," entitled "Principles of Banking." New editions published this week include "The Barrier" and "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, Holman Day's "King Spruce," and Mr. Dooley's "Dissertations."

Paul Elder & Co. publish this week "Messages to Mothers," by Dr. Herman Partsch, a well-known physician of California and author of "The Ills of Indigestion: Their Causes and Their Cures." "The Messages to Mothers," as explained in a sub-title, is "a protest against artificial methods, presenting a simple, practical, and natural scheme for the right diet, care, and treatment of mothers and children, and for the conservation of power in physiological functions. The result of twenty-three years of successful practice."

"In the Bend of the Estataue" is the title of a religious poem by the Rev. S. J. Sparks, and issued this week by the Broadway Publishing Company.

Cassell & Co. have begun the publication of a new series of agricultural handbooks under the general title of "The Complete Farmer." The first work is entitled "Soils: Their Natures and Management," and the author is Primrose McConnell. "Gardening for Women," by Frances Wolseley, giving the particulars of what is being done for the education of women in colleges, schools, and private gardens in Europe, America, and the British colonies, is also in press.

The Roycroft Fraternity of East Aurora, N. Y., announces that it is about to publish the complete works of Elbert Hubbard in forty volumes. The set will be issued in various bindings running in price from $10 to $200 a volume.

Nimrod's "Condition of Hunters: Their Choice and Management," by Charles James Apperley, (Nimrod,) is published this week by the John Lane Company. The illustrations include the original Turner lithographs. "The Insect Book," by W. Percival Westell, illustrated with photographs by R. B. Imisson, appears this week in the Century Handbook Series. Two novels published simultaneously with the foregoing books are "Ashes," giving a picture of simple country life, by a Sardinian author, Grazia Deledda, and "The Master Knot," a story of two women of widely differing character and fortune, by Alice Birkhead.

Early next month Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish "The Spanish Jade," a novelette, by Maurice Hewlett, author of "Richard Yea-and-Nay," &c. They also expect to issue "The Romance of the Reaper," a book giving the inside facts about the Harvester Trust, by Herbert N. Casson, author of "The Romance of Steel," "The Great Races of America," &c.

The following books are published today by Charles Scribner's Sons: "Seventeenth Century Men of Latitude," a series of sketches of the lives and writings of Hales of Eton, Chillingworth, Browne, Whichcote, Taylor, Lane, Baxter, and Smith, men noted for their breadth of mind in an age of religious bigotry, by the Rev. Edward George; "The Essential Life," a series of essays on what may be called the philosophy of life, by Stephen B. Stanton; "The Master of the Inn," a short story, by Robert Herrick.

"Esperanto at a Glance" is the title of a book by Edmond Privat, published this week by the Fleming H. Revell Company. It contains the history, grammar, and vocabulary of the "International Language." It will be followed next month by "Esperanto in Fifty Lessons," by the same author, who is a native of Switzerland and is at present in this country, where he is actively engaged in an Esperanto campaign.

This week "The Conquest of the Great Northwest," by Agnes C. Laut, author of "Lords of the North," &c., is published in two illustrated volumes by the Outing Company. Also "Favorite Fish and Fishing," by Dr. J. A. Henshall, author of "The Black Bass," &c.

Books which will shortly be published by Longmans, Green & Co. are "The Russian Conquest of the Caucasus," with maps and other illustrations, by J. F. Baddeley; "A Practical Guide to School, Cottage and Allotment Gardening," by John Weathers, F. R. H. S., author of "A Practical Guide to Garden Plants," &c.; "The Influence of Alcohol and Other Drugs on Fatigue," by W. H. R. Rivers, M. D., F. R. C. P., and "The Chemistry of the Diazo-Compounds," by John Cannell Cain, D. Sc.

"Photography for Young People," by Tudor Jenks, is published to-day by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. This book follows "Electricity for Young People" by the same author. In it Mr. Jenks has included the practical information necessary for the success of the young amateur in photography.

"Zollenstein," a soldier-of-fortune romance by W. B. M. Ferguson, author of "Garrison's Finish," &c., which was to have been published by D. Appleton & Co. this month, has been postponed until May. "Wolfville Folks," by Alfred Henry Lewis, author of "Wolfville," "Wolfville Days," &c., will be issued on the 15th of next month.

Two novels are published to-day by Dodd, Mead & Co. They are "Meryl," a New Hampshire story of the present day, by William Tillinghast Eldridge, author of "Hilma" and "The Husbands of Edith," a story of continental travel, by George Barr McCutcheon.

UNSYMPATHETIC CHARCATERS.

One is inclined to feel regretful over Neith Boyle's novel, "The Bond." (Duffield & Co.) It is not at all a bad novel. Parts of it are written with insight and skill, and there is very little that does not indicate both feeling and intelligence. What dooms the book is not its construction, not its phraseology, not its mental or artistic standpoint, but its characters.

Mr. Boyce has given us a number of persons who, to him, are quite obviously real, consistent, and interesting. They are not to us. We read, for example, of a gifted, loveable young artist, married to a pretty, sympathetic, and idealistic young woman, and, on the face of it, this should promise a certain degree of happiness for a time—even if we accept the "inevitable complications" in the future. But, on the contrary, from first to last, the young artist and his young wife bicker and quarrel, jar and nag, as no two persons outside a comic paper could ever be induced to do. It does not seem to be even a matter to be explained by that fatal and elastic phrase, "temperament," since the causes for their disagreements are almost always sordid and wretched.

We would suspect Mr. Boyce of open caricature of his own creation if certain elements of sincerity did not force us to believe that he evidently considers these unreasonable and miserable creatures of his to be really natural persons. It is a pity.

Perfecting American Schools.

Profs. Samuel T. Dutton and David S. Snedden of Teachers College, Columbia University, have written a book which they call "The Administration of Schools in the United States," to be published by the Macmillan Company some time before the opening of the next school year, in which they discuss the various problems involved in the control and maintenance, organization, and management of American schools. The work is decidedly comprehensive in its treatment, taking up in detail the theoretical side of education as it is viewed in this country, and devoting a large part of its attention to such practical questions as the construction of schoolhouses, textbooks and supplies, courses of study, &c.

Charles Evans Hughes

Addresses and Papers

With an Introduction by JACOB GOULD SCHURMAN, President of Cornell University.

Crown 8vo., with portrait, $1.50.

There is no more interesting character before the American public to-day than Charles Evans Hughes, Governor of New York, yet comparatively little is known of his ideas and opinions. The present book should be read by every American regardless of his party or his candidate.

Four Victorian Poets

A Study of CLOUGH—ARNOLD—ROSSETTI—MORRIS

By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, author of "Tennyson; His Art and Relation to Modern Life," "Studies in Poetry," etc.

8vo. $1.75 net.

Those who have read Dr. Brooke's able expositions of the art of Tennyson and Browning will expect the same insight and literary judgment here, and will not be disappointed.

Shelburne Essays Fifth Series

By PAUL ELMER MORE.

Crown 8vo. $1.25 net.

"It is rare nowadays to find a writer so thoroughly familiar with both ancient and modern thought. It is this width of view, this intimate acquaintance with so much of the best that has been thought and said in the world, irrespective of local prejudice, that constitute Mr. More's strength as a critic. He has been able to form for himself a sound literary canon and a sane philosophy of life which constitute to our mind his peculiar merit as a critic."—The Independent.

Letters of Cortes

Translated and edited by FRANCIS AUGUSTUS McNUTT.

2 volumes, 8vo. Illustrated. Limited to 750 sets. $10.00 net.

This sumptuous edition of the letters of Cortes presents for the first time in a consecutive English translation the five letters of relation from Fernando Cortes to the Emperor Charles V. Mr. McNutt has appended to the Letters an ample series of notes drawn, with great and painstaking labor, from the best sources, ancient and modern. These serve to illustrate, complete, and correct the narrative.
